PREFACE.

The object of the present work is to give the cuneiform text of a complete group of tablets inscribed with prayers and religious compositions of a devotional and somewhat magical character, from the Kuyunjik collections preserved in the British Museum. To these texts a transliteration into Latin characters has been added, and, in the case of well preserved or unbroken documents, a running translation has been given. A vocabulary with the necessary indexes, etc. is also appended. The cuneiform texts, which fill seventy-five plates, are about sixty in number, and of these only one has hitherto been published in full; the extracts or passages previously given in the works of the late Sir HENRY RAWLINSON, DR. STRASSMAIER, and Prof. BEZOLD will be found cited in the Introduction.

It will be seen that the greater number of the texts formed parts of several large groups of magical tablets, and that certain sections were employed in more than one group. As they appear here they are the result of the editing of the scribes of Ashurbanipal, king of Assyria about B. C. 669—625, who had them copied and arranged for his royal library at Nineveh. There is little doubt however that the sources from which they were compiled were Babylonian. The prayers and formulae inscribed on the tablets, which bore the title of "Prayers of the Lifting of the Hand", were drawn up for use in the private worship, either of the king himself, or of certain of his subjects. Some of the tablets are inscribed with single prayers, and these appear to have been copied from the larger compositions for the use of special individuals on special occasions. As examples of this class of text K 223, K 2808, and K 2836 may be mentioned, which contain Ashurbanipal's personal petitions for the deliverance of Assyria from the evils which had fallen upon the land in consequence of an eclipse of the moon.

Unlike the prayers of many Semitic nations the compositions here given are accompanied by an interesting series of directions for the making of offerings and the performance of religious ceremonies, and they show a remarkable mixture of lofty spiritual conceptions and belief in the efficacy of incantations and magical practices, which cannot always be understood. In language closely resembling that of the penitential psalms we find the conscience-stricken suppliant crying to his god for relief from his sin, while in the same breath he entreats to be delivered from the spells and charms of the sorcerer, and from the hobgoblins, phantoms, spectres and devils with which his imagination had peopled the unseen world.

The scientific study of the Babylonian and Assyrian religion dates from the publication of the Kosmologie der Babylonier by Prof. JENSEN in 1890. In this work the author grouped and classified all the facts connected with the subject which could be derived from published texts, and it was evident that no farther advance could be made until after the publication of new material. It then became clear that the science could be best forwarded by a systematic study of the magical and religious series, class by class, rather than by the issue of miscellaneous texts however complete and important. Following this idea in the present year DR. TALLQVIST produced a scholarly monograph on the important series called by the Assyrians Maklû, and it is understood that Prof. ZIMMERN is engaged on the preparation of an edition of the equally important series called Shurpu. Since this little book has been prepared on similar lines and deals with a connected group of religious texts, it is hoped that it may be of use to those whose studies lead them to the careful consideration of the ancient Semitic religions of Western Asia.

My thanks are due to Prof. BEZOLD both for friendly advice and for help in the revision of the proofs; I am also indebted to Prof. ZIMMERN and a few private friends for suggestions which I have adopted.

INTRODUCTION.

The clay tablets, from which the texts here published have been copied, are preserved in the British Museum and belong to the various collections from Kuyunjik. The majority are of the K. Collection, but some have been included from the Sm., D.T., Rm., 81—2—4, 82—3—23, 83—1—18 and Bu. 91—5—9 collections. The tablets, to judge from those that are complete, are not all of the same size but vary from about $4\frac{7}{8}$ in. \times $2\frac{3}{4}$ in. to $9\frac{1}{2}$ in. \times $3\frac{3}{4}$ in. All contain one column of writing on obverse and reverse, and, with one exception, are inscribed in the Assyrian character of the VIIth century B.C., the longest complete inscription consisting of one hundred and twenty-one lines, the shortest of twenty-nine lines. They were originally copied for Ashurbanipal, king of Assyria from about 669 to 625 B.C., and were stored in the royal library at Nineveh; many of them contain his name and the colophon which it was customary to inscribe on works copied or composed for his collection. The tablets are formed of fine clay and have been carefully baked, and those that escaped injury at the destruction of Nineveh, and have not suffered from the action of water during their subsequent interment, are still in good preservation.

The principal contents of the tablets consist of prayers and incantations to various deities, which were termed by the Assyrians themselves "Prayers of the Lifting of the Hand". It is not difficult to grasp the signification of this title, for the act of raising the hand is universally regarded as symbolical of invocation of a deity, whether in attestation of an oath, or in offering up prayer and supplication. With the Babylonians and Assyrians the expression "to raise the hand" was frequently used by itself in the sense of offering a prayer, and so by a natural transition it came to be employed as a synonym of "to pray", i. e. "to utter a prayer". Sometimes the petition which the suppliant offers is added indirectly, when it is usually introduced by *aššu*¹, though this is not invariably the case². In other passages the phrase introduces the actual words of the prayer, as at the beginning of the prayer of Nebuchadnezzar to Marduk towards the end of the *East India House Inscription*³. In accordance with this extension of meaning the phrase niš kâti, "the lifting of the hand", is often found in apposition to, or balancing, ikribu, supû, etc., and in many instances it can merely retain the general meaning of "prayer", or "supplication"⁴. In the title of the prayers collected in this volume, however, there is no need to divorce the expression from its original meaning; while the phrase was employed to indicate the general character of the composition, we may probably see in it a reference to the actual gesture of raising the hand during the recital of the prayer⁵.

The title was appended to each prayer as a colophon-line together with the name of the deity to whom the prayer was addressed; it is always found following the composition, and is enclosed within two lines ruled on the clay by the scribe:—

¹ Cf., e. g., Annals of Sargon, l. 55 f. (WINCKLER, Die Keilschrifttexte Sargons, I, p. 12): ana Ašsur bîliya aššu turri gimilli Mannai ana işir Ašsur turri kâti aššima*; and Cyl. B of Esarhaddon, ll. 3 ff. (III R, 15): aššu ipîš šarrâti ût abiya ana Ašsur Sin Šamaš Bîl Nabû u Nirgal Istar ša Ninua Istar ša Arba'îlu kâti aššima.

⁴ In some colophon-lines it is employed in the sense of "prayer", or "incantation", cf. IV R, pl. 18, no. 2, l. 15, and pl. 53 [60], Col. IV, l. 29; see also IV R, pl. 55 [92], no. 2, Rev., l. 6, where the phrase INIM.INIM.MA ŠU IL.TA is combined with the usual title of a penitential psalm.

⁵ See below, p. 13. On cylinder-seals a suppliant is frequently represented with one or both hands raised.

The five dots mark the space where the name of the god or goddess is inserted. In the case of prayers to astral deities the name of the deity is preceded by the determinative , while occasionally the suffix  takes the place of the more usual . With these exceptions, however, the form of this colophon-line is invariably the same¹ and furnishes one of the most distinctive characteristics of the present collection of texts². It may perhaps not unfairly be compared to the title      ³, which generally accompanies the "Penitential Psalms" together with a note as to whether the tablet is to be confined to the worship of a particular deity or is suitable for general use.

A further resemblance to the "Penitential Psalms" may be seen in the fact that the "Prayers of the Lifting of the Hand" do not form a series of tablets labelled and numbered by the Assyrians themselves, such as the Maḫlû-Series, or the Šurpu-Series, or the series        . Strictly speaking they do not form a series but merely a class of tablets, which can, however, be readily distinguished from other religious texts not only by their writing and arrangement but also by their style and the recurrence of certain fixed colophon-lines and formulae. A somewhat similar "class" of texts which is not a "series" may be seen in the "Hymns in paragraphs"⁴, the greater part of which have been published by BRÜNNOW in the *Zeitschrift für Assyriologie*⁵. The Assyrian prayers to the Sun-god published by KNUDZON⁶, which also form a class but not a series, can hardly be cited in this connection in view of their special scope and character.

One of the principal guides in the selection of tablets of ¹ In No. 51, l. 9 the title is not essentially different, but merely did duty for two incantations addressed to the same astral deity.

² The colophon-line is very rarely found in texts belonging to other classes; but see K 2538 etc. (cf. infra, p. 15); Sm. 290, obv., l. 4; Sm. 1025, l. 9; Sm. 1250, l. 3, etc.

this class is to be found in the distinctive colophon-line or title already referred to, and the fact that BEZOLD in his Catalogue of the K. Collection has given where possible the colophon-lines and titles, which occur on religious texts, has proved of material assistance. This title taken in conjunction with certain resemblances in the style of the compositions, the shape and quality of the tablets and the character of the writing renders the recognition of the class comparatively simple. It is true that in such a process of selection resemblances in style and writing are of no slight importance¹, but taken by themselves they prove unsafe guides; and, although the collection might have been largely increased if a resemblance in these two particulars had been deemed sufficient to warrant the inclusion of a tablet, yet an element of uncertainty would by this plan have been necessarily introduced². In the first five Sections therefore only those tablets are included in which the distinctive colophon-line occurs. Such has been the method of selection, and by its adoption it was found necessary to include a few tablets which had been already partly published or referred to. Of four of the texts here published in full extracts are to be found in STRASSMAIER's *Alphabetisches Verzeichniss*³; the nearly complete tablet K 163 + K 218 (No. 12) has been published in IV R¹ 64 and repeated in IV R² 57, while the reverse of K 2379, part of its duplicate which is cited as C, is to be found on p. 11 of the Additions to IV R²; finally BEZOLD in ZA III, p. 250 has published K 9490, which contains the conclusion of the text of No. 50¹.

² Among the fragments thus rejected are some with additional recommendations, e. g. K 3310, l. 2 of which, the first line of an incantation, agrees, so far as it goes, with the catch-line of No. 11; K 13231, l. 4 of which corresponds to the catch-line of No. 16; and K 9252, the first line of which corresponds to l. 5 of K 2832 etc., the catalogue of incantations published below. Since printing off I have come across a prayer on K 10695 which is probably of the class of "Prayers of the Lifting of the Hand", as ll. 13 and 14 contain traces of the distinctive colophon-line and rubric; only a few signs of the prayer have been preserved, from which it would appear to have been directed against various forms of sickness; the tablet, the surface of which has suffered considerably from the action of water, must, when complete, have resembled No. 33 in size. The fragment Rm. 446 may possibly have belonged to a "Prayer of the Lifting of the Hand to Istar", though too little of the tablet has been preserved to admit of a certain decision; its colophon of five lines, in which Ashurbanipal names himself the son of Esarhaddon, and the grandson of Sennacherib does not occur elsewhere in prayers of this class; the fragment K 10757 probably belonged to a similar tablet.

³ Of K 140, which forms part of the text here published as No. 22, ll. 1—12

Although the "Prayers of the Lifting of the Hand" do not consist of a series of tablets numbered by the Assyrians themselves, there are not lacking indications that groups of them were arranged in some definite order or sequence. What modifications and changes their original arrangement has undergone will be apparent after a brief examination of the data. The most obvious indications of arrangement are the catch-lines which are found on all the tablets the ends of which have not been broken off. As these repeat at the end of one tablet the first line of the next, they point to some definite arrangement of the texts. The following is a list of those catch-lines which have been preserved:—

A glance will show that not many lines in the two lists correspond. In fact, of the twenty-one catch-lines that have been preserved only one corresponds to the first line of any of the tablets, it being probable that No. 29, l. 3 should be restored from No. 27, l. 1¹; the catch-line of No. 48 may indeed refer to No. 6, l. 1, though this is far from certain as only two words of the latter have been preserved. A comparison of the catch-lines therefore with the beginnings of the tablets does not throw much light on the question of their original order. Some few of the catch-lines, however, may possibly be referred to incantations which do not occur at the beginnings of tablets; the catch-line of No. 11, for instance, may possibly correspond to

No. 14, l. 14, or that of No. 16¹ to No. 46, l. 11, or that of No. 30 to No. 31, l. 11. The catch-line of No. 33 may perhaps represent a variant form of No. 2, l. 43, while the catch-line of No. 38, of which only the first sign has been preserved, might equally well be referred to No. 6, l. 97, No. 10, l. 7, No. 20, l. 8, or No. 21, l. 34. But, even if these instances of correspondence were certain, they would not assist us in our inquiry, as in the case of each the context of the catch-line does not correspond to that of the incantation to which it is assumed to refer; in other words, the incantation or ceremonial section, which the catch-line in question follows, is not the same as that preceding the incantation, to the first line of which the catch-line corresponds. The only inference therefore that can be drawn from these facts is that the texts have undergone various changes and rearrangements at the hands of editors or redactors before they were copied by the scribes of Ashurbanipal.

In this connection it may be of interest to refer to an Assyrian catalogue of incantations that has been preserved on K 2832 + K 6680², as some of the first lines of compositions cited in Col. I of that tablet correspond to certain of the catch-lines and first lines of the present collection of texts. Col. II contains the beginnings of seven incantations which are addressed in the main to the Sun-god and probably have no reference to the "Prayers of the Lifting of the Hand"; the end of the last column, which is all that has been preserved of the reverse of the tablet is uninscribed. In Col. I, the text of which is given on the opposite page, it will be seen that l. 7 corresponds to the catch-line of No. 18, and l. 12 to the remains of the catch-line of No. 42, while l. 11 is identical with the first line of No. 9; the first line of the tablet, moreover, contains the name of the series to which No. 1, according to its colophon, belongs. It is, of course, possible that all the incantations enumerated in this column of the tablet belong to the class of texts here collected,

² See below, p. 15. Catalogues of tablets containing forecasts, mythological legends, etc. testify to the activity of the Assyrian scribes in the collection and classification of other classes of texts.

though, in that case, they have not yet been recognised, and are perhaps not preserved in the collections from Kuyunjik. It is equally possible that the incantations, apart from those already identified, have no connection with the "Prayers of the Lifting of the Hand". In the latter case the tablet affords striking proof of the manner in which scribes, either before or at the time of Ashurbanipal, re-edited the older collections and classes of tablets to which they had access.

The evidence afforded by an examination of their catch-lines and first lines leads therefore to the conclusion that the tablets, which have come down to us, have been subjected to several processes of editing, the incantations having been from time to time collected, selected and rearranged. A noteworthy instance of the way in which a favourite incantation was re-copied and employed in various connections is presented by the address to a goddess which begins: šiptu biltu šur-būtu ummu rîmînūtum âšibat šamî illūti. In No. 6, ll. 71 ff., where it is addressed to the goddess Ba'u, it is preceded by a prayer to Sin and followed by one probably to Šamaš, in the duplicate D it is preceded by some directions for ceremonies, while it forms the first prayer on the tablet which is cited as the duplicate E; in No. 7, ll. 9 ff. we find the title Bilit ili in the place of the name of the goddess Ba'u, the incantation is followed by one to the astral deity Išhara, and it is set aside for use only during an eclipse of the moon; in No. 4 the version presents so many differences that it practically forms a fresh incantation. This is the history, so far as it can be ascertained, of one incantation, and the evidence afforded by the duplicates of other tablets is very similar.

Other evidence of this process of editing is to be found in the fact that some tablets are labelled as belonging to certain series. No. 1, for instance, is stated to be a tablet of the series ¹, though the scribe has omitted to fill in the number of the tablet; No. 30 is the 134th tablet of the series , the rest of its title being broken; and No. 48 forms the eighth part of the composition . Possibly in the first, and certainly in the second of these cases, the series was a composite one made up of various classes of texts, for it is not necessary to conclude from the evidence of No. 30 that the other 133 or more tablets missing from that series were all "Prayers of the Lifting of the Hand"; more probable is the supposition that this class of tablets was merely one of several classes laid under contribution by the compilers of the series.

A still further indication of editing may be seen in the colophons with which the tablets conclude. It is true the majority of them end with the formula which is commonly found on tablets from Ashurbanipal's library, and which may be translated as follows: "The palace of Ashurbanipal, king of the world, king of Assyria, who in Aššur and Bīlīt puts his trust, on whom Nabû and Tašmītu have bestowed broad ears, who has acquired clear eyes. The valued products of the scribe's art, such as no one among the kings who have gone before me had acquired, the wisdom of Nabû,, as much as exists, I have inscribed on tablets, I have arranged in groups¹, I have revised, and for the sight of my reading have set in my palace, I, the ruler, who knoweth the light of Aššur, the king of the gods. Whosoever carries off (this tablet), or with my name inscribes his own name, may Aššur and Bīlīt in wrath and anger cast him down, and destroy his name and seed in the land!" This colophon is by no means universal however, for we find shorter ones on Nos. 11 and 33, while Nos. 18, 35, 38 and 41 present various differences to the normal conclusion, and No. 10 merely contains the note that the tablet was copied from an older original. The reason that no colophons occur on Nos. 19, 29 and 50, the ends of which are left blank, is to be sought in the fact that these tablets contain single prayers extracted from the larger tablets for some temporary purpose². The evidence of catch-lines, duplicates, series and colophons therefore all leads to the same conclusion, that the tablets are not arranged on one plan but have undergone several redactions, and it is obvious that any attempt to restore the original order would be fruitless.

It was necessary therefore to arrange them for publication on some other principle, and the plan adopted has been to classify them according to the deities to whom the prayers and incantations are addressed. The fact that while some of is insufficient to determine what gods the private Assyrians and Babylonians were privileged to regard as their patron deities. It is possible a solution of the question might be obtained from a study of the cylinder-seals, on which the owner, after stating his own name and that of his father frequently adds the name of the god of whom he is the servant¹; meanwhile it may be permissible to speculate whether each class or trade had not its own patron deity, who was also regarded as peculiarly the god of each member of that class.

We know that each city had its local god, who in prayers sometimes takes the place of the suppliant's patron deity², and it may be that a similar localization of deities existed with regard to the different trades and classes of society. Possibly this suggestion may serve to explain in some degree the various pairs and groups of deities whose blessings are invoked by the senders of letters on behalf of their correspondents. It is improbable that these gods were selected merely at the fancy of the writer, and it is easier to suppose that his choice was restricted either by law or custom to the deities who were connected with his own class or profession. A striking instance in point may be seen in the letters K 501, K 538, 83—1—18, 35 and 80—7—19, 23 written by Arad-Nabû to the king³; as the letters deal with religious matters it may be assumed that Arad-Nabû was a priest, and the fact that he invokes such a long list of important deities would on the above assumption be an indication of his high rank and position. It may be urged against this theory that the same writer does not invariably invoke the same gods; many explanations might be offered of this fact, it being conceivable that the letters in question were written at different periods of a man's career, or that certain higher positions included the privileges and rights of those beneath them, or that a man of higher rank in addressing a subordinate would not refer to his own gods but invoke those of the latter. However this may be, it is perhaps not impossible that in prayers and incantations the naming of a suppliant's god and goddess was to his contemporaries equivalent to a declaration of his rank and position in the state.

² Cf. K 2493, l. 17 [ana-ku pulānu apil] pulāni ša ilu alī-šu ilu Marduk ilu ištār alī-šu

Following the formula in which the suppliant states his own name and those of his patron deities we frequently find in "Prayers of the Lifting of the Hand" a statement that the occasion on which the prayer is delivered is after an eclipse of the moon, the formula usually running as follows:—

*ina lumun il^uatalî il^uSin ša ina arhi pulâni ûmi pulâni
išakna(na) | lumun idâti^{bi} ittâti^{bi} lîmnîti^{bi} lâ tâbâti^{bi} | ša ina ikalli-ya u mâtî-ya ibašâ-a¹*

The tablets on which the formula occurs can only have been intended for the use of the king, for no private individual could address a god "in the evil of an eclipse of the moon which in such and such a month on such and such a day has taken place, in the evil of the powers, of the portents, evil and not good which are in my palace and my land". It is probable, however, that only the formula, and not the prayer or incantation itself, was composed for the eclipse. A great body of religious texts and incantations, containing general petitions for deliverance from evil influences and magical powers, would be quite suitable for use after such a calamity, and all that was needed in addition was a formula which could be inserted with the necessary details of the month and day on which the eclipse had taken place. Such a formula is the one cited above, and the fact that it is found in some copies of the same prayer but omitted in others proves that it could be added or removed at pleasure. Thus in the copy of the prayer to Ninib which was made from No. 2 for the use of Ashurbanipal (cf. supra) the eclipse-formula has been inserted between the sixteenth and seventeenth lines of the prayer, and the same insertion has been made in K 2836 the duplicate of No. 27 which is cited as A. The prayer to Ba'u on No. 6 does not contain the formula, neither does it occur in the duplicate D; we find it, however, in the same prayer on No. 7, and in the duplicate E it occurs together with a statement of the suppliant's name etc. It is absent from the last prayer on No. 6, but it has been inserted in the duplicate F where it is also preceded by the suppliant's name and those of his god and goddess. The eclipse-formula may therefore be regarded as forming no essential part of any prayer or incantation; in fact, some of the passages in which it occurs would be improved by its omission as it interrupts the rhythm or metre of the lines on either side of it.

A word must be said on the metre in which the "Prayers of the Lifting of the Hand" are composed. It has long been known that the poetical compositions of the Babylonians were cast in general in a rough form of verse and half-verse; GUNKEL and ZIMMERN, however, were the first to trace in detail the existence of a regular metre¹, pointing out that each verse contained a definite number of accented syllables or rhythmical beats by which it was divided, each division or foot of the verse consisting of single words, or of two or three short connected words, e. g. particles with the words that follow them, words joined by the construct state, etc. ZIMMERN further drew attention to the fact that the metre was frequently indicated by the grouping of signs on the tablet, and that in publishing a text it was consequently of great importance to reproduce the exact position and form of the characters. In the plates, therefore, I have endeavoured to give as far as possible a facsimile of the original tablets. It will be seen, however, that only in a comparatively few instances is the metre indicated in this manner, and the evidence of duplicates goes to show that different scribes attached different degrees of importance to the symmetrical arrangement of their lines. For instance, the carefully marked arrangement of No. 1, ll. 1—8, containing the invocation of Sin, is not reproduced in the duplicates K 3332 and Sm. 1382, nor is the form of the lines on No. 18 retained by the duplicate K 6804.

If, however, we apply to the prayers and incantations the rules which ZIMMERN has adduced from a study of Sp. II, 265a¹, we find that great sections of the various tablets fall naturally into the four-divided metre. This regular metre is, however, frequently interrupted by a line of only three feet or divisions; for instance four fifths of the prayer to Ninib on No. 2 consist of four feet, the remaining fifth of three feet. In many cases, moreover, the lines, though possessing a certain rhythm cannot be regarded as composed in metre. The conclusion to which we are led, therefore, is that the "Prayers of the Lifting of the Hand", though occasionally running into regular metre, are not subject to the strict rules which apply to the poetry of the Babylonians. It is perhaps not improbable that this irregularity was intentional on the part of their composers. In the recital of a prayer or incantation the irregular lines would form a striking contrast or foil to those in metre, and the combination would serve to mark the suppliant's varying degrees of exaltation.

The "Prayers of the Lifting of the Hand" are frequently accompanied by directions for the performance of ceremonies and the observance of certain rites. The paragraphs containing these directions are separated from the incantations by lines ruled on the clay by the scribe and they generally commence with the words ipuš annam "Do the following"². Their length varies considerably, ranging from rubrics of one line to sections of fifteen lines. The rubric of one line which is characteristic of the "Prayers of the Lifting of the Hand" is generally found closely following the title of the prayer, from which it is divided by a line on the clay:—

It will be seen that after the introductory phrase the rubric refers to two alternative rites which are to be performed in connection with the recital of the prayer¹. On one occasion² we find this rubric directly following the incantation, and it is there expanded into two lines by the additional injunction that the incantation is to be recited before Sibziana, an addition rendered necessary by the omission of the title.

Ceremonial sections of two lines are not uncommon. They are sometimes combined with the title which they follow without a break³, containing two or three directions to the effect that incense is to be set before the god or goddess, a libation to be offered, and the incantation to be recited so many times; or they may follow the title from which they are divided by a division-line⁴; or finally they may follow a longer section of ceremonies when they contain additional rites to be performed in connection with those that precede them⁵. Sections of three lines, which are also common, generally follow the title⁶, though they are sometimes found in combination with longer ceremonial sections⁷. Not so common are sections of four lines, which follow the title and are not found in connection with other sections⁸. The longer sections of five⁹, six¹⁰, seven¹¹, ten¹², fourteen¹³, and fifteen¹⁴ lines give directions for offerings in greater detail, while some¹ cannot be classified as in each case only the beginning has been preserved.

By far the commonest injunction in these ceremonial sections is one to the effect that the recital of the incantation is to be accompanied by the burning of incense. The formula usually reads "a censer of incense before the god shalt thou set", though sometimes the kind of incense to be employed is specified, and at other times the wood is mentioned, from which, when lighted, the censers are to be kindled. Certain drink-offerings and libations are also of common occurrence. It is from the longer sections, however, that we learn in greater detail the objects suitable for offering to a god. Water, honey, and butter are frequently mentioned together in the lists of offerings; directions occur for laying before the god dates, garlic, corn and grain, while various flowers, plants and herbs play a conspicuous part both in the offerings and the ritual. Offerings of various kinds of flesh are sometimes specified, while fragments of gold, lapis-lazuli, alabaster etc. might be presented by the suppliant. Pure water and oil are constantly mentioned in the ceremonial sections; the former might be simply offered in a vessel before the god, or used for sprinkling a green bough in his presence; the latter might also form the subject of an offering, or be used for anointing, or be placed in an open vessel into which various objects were thrown. In No. 11, for example, the seed of the maštakal-plant is ordered to be cast into oil, while in No. 12 the priest is to place oil in a vessel of urkarinnu-wood and then cast into it fragments of plaster, gold, the bīnu-plant, the maštakal-plant, and other plants and herbs. When the rite of casting things into oil is to be performed, the amount of oil to be used is generally mentioned, and sometimes the kind of oil to be employed. The rite of the knotted cord² frequently accompanies the "Prayers of the Lifting of the Hand", and on one occasion the rite is followed by a magical formula; in No. 12, a tablet intended for the use of a sick man, when the priest loosens the knot he is to utter the words Īa uma'iranni, after which the sick man is to return to his house without looking backward. The occasions on which the tablets might be used are sometimes specified in the ceremonial sections; Nos. 12 and 31, for instance, are to be used at night, No. 30 on a favourable day, No. 24 during a certain phase of the moon, and No. 21 at night when the wind is in a certain quarter. The use of the majority of the tablets, however, appears to have been unrestricted.

It will be seen, therefore, that the ceremonies which accompany the "Prayers of the Lifting of the Hand" in general character resemble those which occur on other classes of ceremonial and religious texts. They were not merely symbols, but were regarded as potent in themselves, and, as the efficacy of an incantation depended on its correct recital, so their power resulted from a scrupulous performance of each detail. They are, with one exception, written after the prayer or incantation they accompany, but in most cases they describe rites which are to be performed before the recitation of the prayer. The god or goddess must be propitiated by the necessary gifts before the suppliant is in a position to make his appeal in the divine presence; the altar must be loaded with offerings and the censers lighted before the words of the incantation can take effect.

Section I.

Prayers addressed to Groups of Deities.

The plan on which the following pages have been arranged requires perhaps a word of explanation. The tablets are numbered and are here treated in the same order as they occur in the plates at the end of the volume. I have not divided the Transliteration, Translations and Notes into three separate Sections, as I believe the theoretical simplicity of such an arrangement is purchased at a great practical disadvantage, the constant reference from one part of the book to another tending rather to weary than assist the reader. To reduce this inconvenience as far as possible I have collected together all the matter referring to each tablet. A full transliteration of the text is first given which is followed by a description and translation of the prayers, incantations and ceremonies that it contains. The notes follow the translation, the numbers at the head of each paragraph referring to the line of the text with which the note in question deals.

In the Transliteration those portions of the text that have been restored are placed within square brackets, while the signs within round brackets always denote phonetic complements. Variant readings are given at the foot of the page, the duplicate tablets being cited by the capitals A, B, C etc., the registration numbers of which are in each case given in the first footnote to the cuneiform text. In transliterating a well preserved tablet I have commenced a fresh line with each line of the text and have endeavoured to retain as far as possible the original spacing and arrangement of the words as they stand on the tablet itself. As however in the case of broken tablets such an arrangement would lead to a considerable waste of space, I have let the transliteration of those tablets run on continuously, putting between each line a space of five dots if only one character is missing and ten dots to indicate a gap of two or more characters. When the text of such a broken or badly preserved tablet is insufficient to furnish an intelligible translation I have abstained from attempting one; in every case however a transliteration of the text is given, each word of which is cited in the Vocabulary.

The texts have been divided into Sections, which are to some extent explained by their titles. The first Section, consisting of Nos. 1—10, is composed of tablets on each of which are inscribed separate prayers to two or more deities. In some cases (Nos. 3, 5 and 9) there remain prayers addressed only to one god and goddess but from No. 6 it would appear probable that originally four or five deities shared the prayers inscribed on each of these tablets. It is possible that some fragmentary texts, at present containing a single prayer or incantation and therefore classified under Sections II and III, formed part of a large tablet which when complete contained addresses to various deities, and which would accordingly fall under the present heading. The fact however that such fragments present no distinctive characteristic by which they may be detected renders hazardous any attempt at separating them from the texts addressed solely to one god or goddess. Under these circumstances the only practicable course was to ignore the possibility of their belonging to the first section and to classify them according to their present contents.¹

No. 1 (K 155) consists of the upper part of a large tablet of which fully half has been broken away. The text in its present condition falls into three main sections: (a) ll. 1—27, a prayer to Sin on the occasion of an eclipse of the moon, (b) ll. 29—35, the opening lines of a prayer to Istar, and (c) ll. 36—51, the conclusion of a prayer to Tasmîtu which like (a) is directed against the evils resulting from a lunar eclipse. The prayer to Sin (a) commences with an address to the god describing his power and attributes. Ll. 12 and 13 state the occasion of the prayer: an eclipse of the moon has taken place bringing evil on the land of Assyria and the palace of the king who therefore appeals to the god of heaven and to the Moon-god himself, whose prerogative it is to give an oracle of the great gods when they so desire.

22. Do thou set favour and righteousness upon me!
23. May my god and my goddess, who for long have been angry with me,
24. In righteousness and justice deal graciously with me! Let my way be propitious, with joy
25. And ZAGAR, the god of dreams hath sent,
26. In the night season my sin may I hear my iniquity may
27. For ever may I bow myself in humility before thee!

Of (b) the prayer to Ištar only a few lines have been preserved containing the invocation of the goddess. She is addressed as: "Ištar the heroine, strong among goddesses! Lady(?) of heaven and earth, the splendour of the four quarters! the first-born of Sin, offspring of Ningal! O Ištar, over these heavens dost thou rule." The reverse of the tablet (c) consists of the last fifteen lines of a prayer to Tašmîtu, in which the goddess is petitioned to intercede with her husband the god Nabû and to induce him to remove the sickness and enchantments caused by the Moon's eclipse. After addressing the goddess by name her suppliant continues: —

38. I so and so, son of so and so, whose god is so and so,
whose goddess is so and so,
39. In the evil of an eclipse of the Moon, which in such and such a month on such and such a day has taken place
40. In the evil of the powers, of the portents, 'evil and not good, which are in my palace and my land,
41. Have turned towards thee! I have established thee! Listen to the incantation!
42. Before Nabû thy spouse, the lord, the prince, the first-born son of Isagila, intercede for me!

43. May he hearken to my cry at the word of thy mouth; may he remove my sighing, may he learn my supplication!
44. At his mighty word may god and goddess deal graciously with me!
45. May the sickness of my body be torn away; may the groaning of my flesh be consumed!
46. May the consumption of my muscles be removed!
47. May the poisons that are upon me be loosened!
48. May the ban be torn away, may the be consumed!
49. May; at thy command may mercy be established!
50. May god and king ordain favour at thy mighty command that is not altered
51. And thy true mercy that changes not, O lady Tašmîtu!

The catch-line reads: "O lord, that directest the multitude of the peoples, the whole of creation!"

1. The word ru-šu-bu (= rušûbu), if my reading is correct, is an adj. of the form فَعُول, the usual forms of the word being rašbu and rašûbu. The character, however, which I read as 𐎶 is almost obliterated and might possibly be read 𐎶.

6. šarâḫu is proved by JENSEN to have the meaning "to shine, be bright"; cf. Kosmologie p. 105 f., where the present passage is quoted from STRASSMAIER, A.V., no. 8063. For the meaning of dipâru "torch", cf. JENSEN, ZK, II, p. 53, and ZIMMERN, BPS, p. 47.

9. ma-[am-ma-an] is the probable restoration of the end of this line and of l. 19. From the end of l. 10 only one character appears to be missing; bu-uk-ri-[ka] would therefore be a possible restoration.

11. ina does not occur in the text with the first pâni-ka as we might be led to expect from the latter half of the line: for a similar use of pânu without the preposition cf. IV R 59 [66], no. 2, rev. l. 18, pâni-ka lu-ḫir, "in thy sight may I be precious".

12 f. The formula contained in these two lines, stating the occasion of the prayer, is of frequent occurrence in these texts (cf. Introduction). The first half of the second line, which in several tablets forms a line by itself, is in apposition to ina lumun ^{iu}atalê ^{iu}Sin, as indicated in my translation, and the whole formula, which does not represent a complete sentence in itself, acts merely as an introduction to the sentence that follows it. The only difficulty in the two lines is in connection with the phrase       . These two ideograms occur together not only in the formula under discussion but are occasionally to be met with in prayers incantations etc., and whenever they so occur they are never joined by a copula but always stand in apposition to one another as in the present passage, cf. No. 12, l. 64 ai idihâ-a lumun šu-nâti^{bl} ID.MIŠ ITI.MIŠ ša šamlî-î u uršitim(tim), HAUPT's ASKT, No. 7, Rev. l. 4 f. ina lumun ID.MIN.MIŠ ITI.MIŠ ši-kin ušurti^{bl}, l. 7 f. aš-šum lumun ID.MIŠ ITI.MIŠ limnîti^{bl} ša ina bîti-yâ ba-šâ^{bl}-ma pal-ḫa-ku, and l. 9 f. ina lumun ID.MIŠ ITI.MIŠ šu-ti-ḫa-an-ni-ma, K 6343, l. 6 ID.MIŠ ITI.MIŠ limnîti^{bl} lâ ṭabâti, K 8005 + K 8845 + K 8941, a very fragmentary prayer of Aššurbânipal formed from three pieces I have lately joined, in l. 3 of which the phrase ID.MIŠ ITI.MIŠ occurs, IV R 17, Rev. l. 15 f. mu-pa-aš-šir NAM.BUL.BI.I ID.MIŠ ITI.MIŠ lim-nîti^{bl}, probably IV R 60 [67], Rev. l. 34 [ID].MIŠ ITI.MIŠ BAR.MIŠ ana šarri u mâti-šu bašâ^{bl}-a, etc. More commonly however the ideogram     is found by itself, cf. No. 12, l. 65 lumun ITI ali u mâti ai ikšudanni(ni) yâ-ši, the passages quoted from bilingual incantations in BRÜNNOW's List, no. 9429, IV R 56 [63], Col. ilu Bîl ù ilu Nabû am-mar ITI šî-tu-uk-ki ma-šu a-na šarru bîli-yâ ū-šî-tu-uk-ku šarru bî-ili lu la i-pa-laḫ, K 168, Obv. 1. 16 f. (a letter, published by WINKLER, Keilschrift, II, Leipzig, 1893, p. 28), etc.

 Though the interpretation of the ideogram ITI is entirely dependent on the context of the passages where it occurs, there is not much doubt as to its meaning. The word is generally rendered by some synonym of "sign" or "omen" (cf. LENORMANT, Études accadiennes, Vol. III, p. 136 f., DELITZSCH, WB, p. 169, SAYCE, Hibbert Lectures, pp. 449, 459, 512, 516, 538, JENSEN in SCHRADER'S Keilins. Bibl., Vol. II, pp. 249, 253, etc.), though in ZK I, p. 303 JENSEN assigned to it the active meaning "power, might (ops)". That the former is the more correct rendering of the two is I think put beyond a doubt by a passage occurring in a letter (K 112), the text of which has recently been published by R. F. HARPER, Assyrian and Babylonian Letters, Pt. II, p. 228, London 1894. The first fifteen lines of this letter read: a-na ^{am}ik-karu bîli-ya arad-ka ^milu Nabû-zîr-îšîr lu šulmu(mu) a-na bîli-ya ilu Nabû u ilu Marduk a-na bîli-ya (5) šanâti^{pl} ma'-da-ti lik-ru-bu ITI.MIŠ lu-u ša šamî-i lu ša iršitim(tîm) lu-u ša  am-mar lim-na-ni a-sa-tar ina ba-at-ta-ta-ai ma-ḫar ilu Šamas u-sa-ad-biib-šu-nu (10) ina karân sûtû-u ina mî^{pl} rimki ina šamni^{pl} piššâti^{pl}- šu amilûti^{pl} (?) am-mu-ti ū-sa-ab-ši-il u-sa-kil-šu-nu šar pu-u-ḫi ša ^{mât}Akkadû^{ki} ITI.MIŠ uš-taḫ-ra-an-ni i-si-si (15) ma-a mî-nu-u ITI Though the interpretation of this text is in places exceedingly obscure the general drift of the letter is clear enough. In consequence of enquiries concerning the ITI Nabûzîrîšîr takes the necessary observations and returns his report to an official styled the ikkaru. After the usual salutations he states that he has observed "the ITI, whether of the sky, or of the earth, or of the  (possibly an exhaustive formula), and that they are unfavourable; and probably in consequence of this he has performed certain rites and ceremonies which he proceeds to narrate. It is obvious that the only possible meaning for ITI in this passage is "sign" or "portent", a rendering that suits all other passages in which I have met the word including the one already referred to as having been somewhat differently translated by JENSEN.¹ That

¹ Prof. BEZOLD has called my attention to the use of ITI in the colophon

the word is in itself colourless taking a favourable or unfavourable meaning from its context is suggested by the qualifying phrase linnîti²¹ lâ lâbâti²¹ inserted in the formula under discussion, and this is put beyond a doubt by Rm. 136, a fragment of an omen tablet, in ll. 13 and 16 of which we find the phrase ITI damîktim[(tim?)] as well as ITI linuttim(tim). It is natural however that in prayers for help or deliverance ITI should generally occur in an unfavourable sense.

But while we can assign a meaning to the ideogram with something like certainty, we do not meet with the same success when we look for its Semitic equivalent. DELITZSCH indeed in *AL*³, p. 30, no. 256 suggests a rendering takiltu(?) and he is followed by LEHMANN in his explanation of K 168, ll. 14 and 16 (cf. Šamašsumukîn, p. 76 f.), in which he transliterates ITI with the plural-sign as taklâti, tak-li-ta-su-nu occurring in close connection two lines above. But against this rendering is to be urged the fact that wherever the sign occurs in bilingual incantations it is, as far as I know, rendered not by takiltu but by ittu. As however I do not know on what grounds DELITZSCH bases his identification of the ideogram with takiltu, I have throughout my transliteration rendered the word by ITI, thus leaving the question in abeyance.

The explanation of ID is also conjectural. Though ID.MIŠ and ITI.MIŠ are in apposition it does not follow that they are synonymous, as they are taken by LENORMANT, La Magic, p. 164 and by SAYCE, Hibbert Lectures, pp. 173 and 538. It appears to me that DELITZSCH has given the true explanation of the word in his translation of the sentence aš-šum lunnun ID.MI ITI.MIŠ linnîti²¹ ša ina bîti-ya bašâ²¹-ma, to which reference has already been made and which he renders: "von wegen (aššum) der bösen Mächte, der bösen Zeichen, die in meinem Hause sind" (cf. WB, p. 169). Here apparently he renders ID by its most common equivalent idu, the plural of which constantly occurs in the sense of "forces, powers", and this view is supported by the of K 8713, where the word apparently refers to and should be rendered by "astrological forecasts". I think however that the more general rendering "portent", which would of course include the special meaning attaching to the word in this tablet, is better suited to many of the other passages in which ITI is to be found; see especially IV R 3, Col. I, 1. 29 f.

fact that in the same hymn (cf. supra p. 8) ID occurs with the dual as well as the plural-sign.¹ Moreover in No. 6, l. 114 f. i-da-tu-u-a occurs in parallelism with šunât^{pl}-u-a and must therefore have a somewhat similar meaning to that of ID in the present passage. The meaning of the formula may therefore be regarded as practically settled though the Semitic equivalent of ITI is still a matter of some uncertainty.

15. That   is equivalent to nazâzu is clear from BRÜNNOW, List, no. 4893. If on the other hand we read the group phonetically, the form du-bu must be explained as Perm. II 1 from dabâbu, for *dubbubû, *dubb-bû; the former explanation however appears to me the more probable of the two. The verb uš-ta-mu-û in the second half of the line I take to be III 2 from , "to speak", with a causative signification, "to cause to speak", i. e. "petition".

16. tâmîtu in the technical sense of "an oracle" occurs in the regular formulae of the so-called "Downfall" tablets, in which "Izib 7" commonly consists of the phrase izib ša i-na pî mâr^{ambâri} ardi-ka ta-mit up-tar-ri-du, "Grant that in the mouth of the magician's son thy servant a word (i. e. the oracle for which we ask) may hasten", or in the 1st pers. ta-mit ina pî-ya up(or ip)-tar-ri-du, cf. KNUDZON, Assyrische Gebete an den Sonnengott, Vol. II, p. 42, Leipzig 1893.

17. For the explanation of bubbulum as "the day of (the Moon's) disappearance" cf. JENSEN, Kosmologie, pp. 91, 106.

19.     I have taken as an abbreviation of      . It might be possible to read the group ilu ina isid ûmi "o god! in the foundation of (that) day is a power unrivalled etc.", referring to the thirtieth day of the month mentioned in the preceding line. But this explanation appears rather forced, and the parallelism of l. 9 seems to indicate that the group is the name of a god. That nam-rašit = the New-Moon has been shown by JENSEN, Kosmologie, p. 104 f., and the invocation of the Moon-god as the New-Moon, following immediately on the mention of the end of the month, is singularly appropriate.

¹ The sign of the dual is also to be found with ID in the name of the plant

20. as-ruk-ka si-rik; cf. No. 35, l. 9, as-ruk-ki si-rik addressed to Iškara. The suffixes -ka and -ki are probably to be regarded as having the force of ana ka-a-tu, ana ka-a-ti. For a similar use of the suffix cf. K 5418a, Col. IV, l. 7, quoted by BEZOLD, Catalogue, p. 715: bīti-ši-na (or bīt-si-na) i-pu-uš-ka na-rū-a aš-tur-ka, "their house have I made for thee, my tablet have I inscribed for thee". A somewhat analogous instance occurs in an Old-Babylonian letter (V.A.Th. 575), published by MEISSNER, Beitr. z. Assyr., Vol. II, pp. 561 f., 577, in l. 10 of which the verb i-zi-ba-ak-ku-šu occurs, governing two suffixes however and not a suffix and a substantive as in the present passage.    may be read il-lu in agreement with mūši, "an incantation of the bright night". But lallartu (cf. BRÜNNOW, List, No. 11181) appears to me the preferable reading, as it balances ri-šš-ta-a in the second half of the line. For a similar use of the word cf. Sm. 954, Obv. l. 33, quoted by ZIMMERN, BPS, p. 95.

25. The title *ilu ša šunāti*²¹ occurs in IV R 66, No. 2, Rev. l. 24, where it is applied to   , which ZIMMERN (op. cit. p. 105) explains as meaning "dream-god".    in l. 11a of the list of gods published in II R 54 is possibly to be regarded as a synonym of Bil, as suggested by BRÜNNOW, List, No. 11771.

26. The group -tu in V R 20, 3^c is read as sartu "sin" by ZIMMERN, op. cit., p. 12, while for -ta, -ti in IV R 61, no. 1, ll. 29 and 31 he proposes a rendering šertu "anger, wrath", where the meaning "sin" would be inappropriate (cf. op. cit., p. 85). That "sin" is the meaning of the word in the present passage is clear from the corresponding arniya in the first half of the line. For my reading širtu and not sartu or sartu cf. DELITZSCH in ZIMMERN'S BPS, p. 115.

28. This colophon line, which is characteristic of the present collection of texts (cf. Introduction), is with one exception written throughout in Sumero-Akkadian, thus: INIM.INIM.MA ŠU IL.LA ^{ilu} (or ^{hakkab}) KAN (or KID). The exception occurs in l. 14 of No. 35, which reads: ni-iš ka-a-ti ša ^{ilu} Bilit. The beginning of the line is unfortunately broken off and we are consequently left in doubt as to the Assyrian equivalent of INIM.INIM.MA. Our choice however appears to be restricted to amātu and šiptu (cf. BRÜNNOW, List, nos. 588 f.), and of these the former is to be preferred as it distinguishes the ideogram from  occurring at the commencement of almost all these incantations. In Assyrian the line should therefore in all probability run: amât nîš kâti ša ^{ilu} (or ^{hakkab}) The expression nîš kâti, "hand-raising", has in many passages almost lost its original meaning and been transferred to the utterance that generally accompanied the act. It is thus possible that the colophon-line in question is simply equivalent to: "The words of the prayer to such and such a god". My own opinion however is that INIM.INIM.MA, whether considered the equivalent of amātu or not, has acquired in the colophons where it occurs the definite meaning of "prayer".¹ On this assumption nîš kâti must be regarded as retaining its original significance and we must see in the title an allusion to some act or ceremony accompanying the recitation of the prayer that precedes it. It may possibly be urged against this view that in No. 8, l. 21 ŠU IL.LA III šanîtu îpuš(uš) takes the place of the more usual mînûtu(tu) an-ni-tu III *šanîtu munu(nu)*², and should therefore be treated as its equivalent in meaning and translated: "the prayer three times perform". But such an inference is far from certain and it appears to me more probable that in the case of No. 8 the act of raising the hand three times is substituted for the threefold repetition of the prayer.

30. My translation of the ideogram DI.BAR is conjectural, for the fact that the sign-group    occurs in a list of gods in II R 54 as an equivalent of Bil (cf. BRÜNNOW, List, no. 9544) does not throw much light upon its meaning. Of the reading of the duplicate B, which probably gave the phonetic equivalent of the ideogram unfortunately only the ending -tû has been preserved.

¹ It is possible that the group should be transliterated by some word with the definite meaning of prayer, such as tišlîtu or ikribu.

² For a discussion of this phrase cf. infra, sub No. 2, l. 10.

35. In the duplicate B the sign following  is written very clearly thus . This may have been a slip on the part of the scribe for , or possibly for , in which latter case the first part of the line should be transliterated: MUJ] BA.AN.UD.DA

41. a-ra-ti, for arrati, is clearly used here in the sense of "incantation" or "invocation", as shown by the duplicate C, which reads ši-mi-i su-[pi-ya]. The end of l. 42 is restored from the somewhat similar line in HAUPT'S ASKT, No. 19, Rev. l. 5, which reads: — ana ẓar-ra-di id-lum ^{itu} Šamaš ẓa²-i-ri na-ra-mi-ki a-bu-ti ẓab-ti-ma. I have adopted ZIMMERN'S explanation of the phrase in BPS, p. 59; abbuttu he derives from  "to twist", explaining the word as meaning "chain, fetter", and to the phrase abbuttu sabātu he gives the meaning "to go bail, give security for someone, to intercede for him" (esp. of intercession to a deity). Cf. also DELITZSCH in ZIMMERN'S BPS, p. 117 f. and WB, p. 75 f., where he derives the word from .

48. li-tā-kil I take to be = littakil, IV 2 from akālu. If the word be read li-da-gil, I 1 from dagālu, then li-in-ni-is-si must be regarded as I 2, not IV 1 from nisû, and the line would run: "May he tear away the sickness of my body; may he behold the sighing of my flesh". But the more common form of the Pres. of dagālu is idagal, and the reading of the duplicate C seems rather to support the former view.

49. ba-ni-ti, a subs. from bānu "to shine". From the meaning "brightness" the word comes to signify "mercy", cf. ZIMMERN, op. cit., p. 60.

54. The scribe has left a space after duppu evidently with the intention of subsequently filling in the number of the tablet. Two other tablets of the Series Bit rimki are known to us, namely K 3245 etc. and K 3392, which are labelled respectively the 1st. and 3rd. tablets of the series (cf. BEZOLD, Catalogue, p. 528 and Vol. III, p. VIII). The fragment K 6028 is a duplicate of K 3392 (cf. op. cit. p. 757) but it is broken off before the first line of the colophon, and of the catch-line the beginning only is preserved: šiptu ga-aš-ru šú- Now K 2538 etc. Col. VI, l. 1 reads šiptu gaš-ru šu-pu-u i-ziz^{al} Aššur. Therefore on p. 5 of the Additions to IV R, the tablet K 6028 has been published as "probably part of the same text" as K 2538 etc. But K 3392, which preserves the beginning of the colophon shows that this is not the case. The catch-line does indeed refer to the first line of the incantation contained in Col. VI, ll. 1—21 of K 2538 etc. but this incantation, which is a duplicate of No. 9, ll. 1—26, has evidently been taken from the present class of texts and inserted in the composite and partly bilingual tablet published in IV R, pl. 21*. K 3392 and its duplicate on the other hand would appear to belong to the present class of texts, for their style and colophon-line point in this direction. From the shape of the tablet however it is certain that it originally contained four columns, two on either side, an arrangement that is never met with in the texts collected in this volume. The most probable explanation therefore seems to be that the Series Bît rimki was a composite collection of texts including among others texts of the present class.¹ It has been already pointed out that K 2832 + K 6680 contains "a list of the first lines of various incantations" (cf. BEZOLD, Catalogue, Vol. II, p. XXII), and it is possible that in Col. I we possess a fragmentary catalogue of the first lines of some of the incantations of this series. The tablet in question commences , while l. 11 runs šiptu ga-aš-ru šú-pu-ú i-ziz^{al} Aššur, a commencement which is identical with the catch-line of K 3392 and the first line of the Obv. of No. 9 and of its duplicate K 2538, Col. VI, ll. 1—21, and which must therefore refer to that incantation. The Bît rimki itself, from which the series takes its name, may possibly have been a certain temple or more probably a special chamber or division of every large temple. That it actually existed in one or other of these capacities is clear from the passages where it is mentioned throughout the hymn to the Sun-god published in V R, pl. 50 f.; in Col. III, l. 20 occurs the phrase ina bît rim-ki ina i-ri-bi-ka, "when thou enterest the house of libation", and in l. 55 ana bît rim-ki ina i-ri-ka, "when thou approachest the house of libation"; cf. also Col. III, ll. 55, 70 and Col. IV, ll. 21, 28 of the same text.

The first eight lines of No. 2 (K 2487 + K 2502 + K 2591) contain the end of a prayer to Tašmîtu, in which the suppliant, after beseeching the goddess to confer favour and to destroy iniquity, concludes with the desire that he may extol her heart and bow in humility before her. Ll. 9 and 10 form a colophon containing directions for ceremonies, for a full discussion of which cf. p. 19 ff. These are followed by a complete prayer of thirty-one lines addressed to Ninib (ll. 11—41) commencing with fourteen lines in description and praise of the god; the suppliant then states the offerings that he has duly made, relying on which he concludes with the request to be cleansed from sin, comforted in sorrow, and restored to the favour of god and goddess. Ll. 20—23 are remarkable as they attribute a gentle character to Ninib, describing him as the guide of the wandering and the sustainer of the weak, the restorer of the dead and the cleanser of sins. It is probable that in this description the god is regarded in his solar character as the friend of mankind, a function that is not however inconsistent with his character as the god of battle.¹ The eight fragmentary lines, with which the tablet concludes, contain the beginning of a prayer to a goddess, which in its damaged condition does not admit of a connected translation.

Translation.

11. O mighty son, first-born of Bil!
12. Powerful, perfect, offspring of Isara,
13. Who art clothed with terror, who art full of fury!
14. O Utgallu (?), whose onslaught is unopposed!
15. Mighty is (thy) place among the great gods!
16. In Ikur, the house of decisions, exalted are thy heads,
17. And Bil thy father has granted thee
18. That the law of all the gods thy hand should hold!
19. Thou judgest the judgement of mankind!
20. Thou ledest him that is without a leader, the man that is in need!
21. Thou holdest the hand of the weak, thou exaltest him that is not strong!

22. The body of the man that to the Lower World has been brought down thou dost restore!
23. From him who sin possesses, the sin thou dost remove!
24. Thou art quick to favour the man with whom his god is angry!
25. O Ninib, prince of the gods, a hero art thou!
26. I so and so, son of so and so, whose god is so and so,
whose goddess is so and so,
27. Have bound for thee a cord, have I offered thee;
28. I have offered thee tarrinnu, a pleasant odour;
29. I have poured out for thee mead, a drink from corn.
30. With thee may there stand the gods of Bil!
31. With thee may there stand the gods of Īkur!
32. Truly pity me and hearken to my cries!
33. My sighing remove and accept my supplication!
34. Let my cry find acceptance before thee!
35. Deal favourably with me who fear thee!
36. Thy face have I beheld, let me have prosperity!
37. Thou art pitiful! Truly pity me!
38. Take away my sin, my iniquity remove!
39. Tear away my disgrace and my offence do thou loosen!
40. May my god and my goddess command me and may they ordain good fortune!
41. May I praise thy heart, may I bow in humility before thee!

The first clause of the colophon contained in l. 9 f. has been already discussed, cf. p. 13 f., and in future I shall not again refer to this phrase which occurs on each of the texts published under Sections I—V. The expression  is to be found at the commencement of most directions for ceremonies interchanging with  and with  and evidently forming a sort of set introduction to the ceremonies that follow. Each of these three groups of signs is probably equivalent to īpuš annam, "do the following", as BEZOLD has pointed out in ZA, V, p. 111. The three directions however that follow this introductory phrase in the present text require some explanation. The first is to the following effect: — "a ŠA.NA of incense before Tašmîtu shalt thou set", and the question at once arises, what is a ŠA.NA? The phrase ŠA.NA burâši is of very common occurrence both in these texts and in regulations for ceremonies generally, and wherever it occurs there are only two alternatives possible as to its meaning. It must either be some measure of weight or capacity stating the exact amount of incense to be used, or else it must refer to the vessel in which the incense is contained. Which of these two meanings should be adopted is made clear from the use of ŠA.NA in K 3245, Col. II, l. 14b,¹ which reads, VII ŠA.NA tašakan(an), and in a colophon-line that is characteristic of the present class of texts, lû ina ŠAR lû ina ŠA.NA ipuš(uš), cf. Nos. 16, 11; 18, 19; 21, 92 etc. As in both these expressions ŠA.NA is used absolutely, it cannot be the name of any measure or weight. We are reduced therefore to the second of the two alternatives and must conclude that the ŠA.NA was a kind of vessel capable of containing incense and of being set before a god; it may have taken the form of a small brazier or tripod.²

The second injunction, KAS.SAG tanaki(ki)-ma, is also frequently to be met with in the ritual texts. The two signs  are not to be read phonetically as an adv. bi-riš, but are rather to be regarded as the name of some libation, for otherwise the verb tanaki would be left without an object. The KAS.SAG may have been the name of some drink or liquid, but it appears to me to be more probable that it was the name of the drink-offering itself. For in IV R 60 [67], 20a there occurs the injunction KAS.SAG karâni tanaki[(ki)], definitely stating that the KAS.SAG is to be of wine. This view is further supported by the fact that in Sm. 810, Obv. 1. 8 (BEZOLD) there occurs the expression                , KAS.SAG tumalli-ma tukân(an) "the KAS.SAG thou shalt fill up and offer". To "fill up a liquid" would be extremely colloquial English and in Assyrian the phrase would be meaningless; there would be nothing strange however in speaking of filling up such and such a drink-offering. The expression KAS.SAG  (= šatû), "the KAS.SAG of drinking", i. e. that is drunk, which occurs in the same tablet, Obv. 1. 17 and in Sm. 937, 1. 4 (BEZOLD) would also seem to support this explanation. In No. 8, 1. 21 mî-ik-ha tanaki(ki)-ma occurs in the place of the more usual KAS.SAG tanaki(ki)-ma. It is not possible however to argue from this passage alone that mî-ik-ha = KAS.SAG, for we have already seen (cf. p. 14) that the latter half of the same line contains a variation from the usual formula.

² In texts containing directions for ceremonies and rites we meet with the phrase ŠA.NA GIBIL.LA (= dipâru) cf. No. 12, l. 86, K 6052, l. 5, IV R 55 [62], No. 2, Obv. l. 23, etc. If we here assign to dipâru its usual meaning of "torch" (cf. p. 6) it is not easy to see what meaning attaches to ŠA.NA. In fact the phrase appears inexplicable to me, unless we assume that dipâru has also the more indefinite meaning "flame" or "fire". It was apparently on such an assumption that STRONG (Journal asiatique, 1893, p. 382) suggests for the expression the meaning "un encensoir". In that case ŠA.NA burâši and ŠA.NA dipâru would be practically synonymous.

The colophon concludes with the direction -tû an-ni-tu -nu, my transliteration of which as mînuûtu(tû) an-ni-tû mu-nu(nu) requires justification. If the phrase always occurred precisely in the form in which we find it in the present text, it might with plausibility be urged that the signs should be read phonetically: šit-tû an-ni-tû šit-nu, šitnû being regarded as Imperative I 2 from šanû "to repeat", and šittu a substantive of the form  derived from the same verb. This rendering however is upset by the fact that the verb does not always occur as -nu. For instance in IV R 55 [62], no. 2, Obv. 1. 19 f. we find the direction šiptu an-ni-tû III šanûtu ina pân ^{itu} Istar -ma, and  without -nu is also to be found in Nos. 6, 96; 11, 45; 12, 16 and 103; 30, 27; K 3292, 1. 7 etc. Moreover in 1. 29 of K 6679 + K 8083, two fragments of a large tablet containing ceremonies and prayers to the goddess Istar which I have recently joined, we find the form -û. These facts together prove conclusively that  is an ideogram, -nu and -û being merely phonetic complements. The phonetic complement -nu indicates that  = manû in the present phrase, and this is put beyond a doubt by the fact that ŠA.MI.NI.𐎶𐎶𐎶 occurring in V R 50, Col. II, l. 63 in the sense of repeating an incantation is rendered in the Semitic translation by mu-nu (cf. BRÜNNOW, List, no. 5972). But if 𐎶𐎶𐎶-nu = munu(nu) the substantive 𐎶𐎶𐎶-tū must be regarded as mînûtu(tū), the whole phrase being equivalent to "This repetition (i. e. subject of repetition = incantation) repeat". The direction refers to the prayer or incantation that precedes, not to that which follows the colophon in which it occurs.

14. For a discussion of ilu UT.GAL.LU as a synonym of ilu NIN.IB cf. JENSEN, Kosmologie, p. 461 f.

16. ta-ši-la-a-ti prob. = plur. of tašiltu, "decree, decision(?)", a subs. of the form تَفْعَلَةٌ (or possibly تَفْعَلَةٌ) from √تَفَعَّلَ. Compare taniltu from √تَنَلَّ.

20. The indiscriminate use of i and ī in the phrase i-ka-a i-ku-ti is striking. For the meaning of the words cf. DELITZSCH, WB, p. 370.

Ll. 27–29 recount the ceremonies and offerings which the suppliant states he has made to the god Ninib. After the formal statement of his name in l. 26, he continues: "I have bound for thee a cord". It is probable that this rite of binding a cord before the god belongs to the great body of sympathetic magic that plays so important a part in Babylonian sorcery. The spell was in all probability regarded as binding only so long as the cord remained knotted, its significance being somewhat similar to that of twisting the black and white threads mentioned as a spell in the sixth šurpu tablet, Col. III, ll. 28–31, cf. JENSEN, ZK II, p. 42 ff. The offering mentioned in the second half of the line is somewhat obscure; KU.A.TIR is indeed translated by SAYCE (Hibbert Lectures, p. 529) as "cones(?)" and in a footnote he gives the following three reasons for his translation: in K 4345, Col. III, l. 18 the signs A.TIR occur in the name of the plant šamA-TIR-ti-a-ru, Tiyaru is "the cedar" (II R 23, 23), and the determinative KU denotes the husk of a seed. Now A.TIR preceded by the determinative 𐎶 has in all probability an entirely different signification from A.TIR in combination with ti-a-ru and preceded by the determinative 𒍪𒍪𒍪, and in the second place the determinative 𒍪 (= kîmu) denotes not "the husk of a seed", but "field produce, grain", cf. JENSEN, ZK II, p. 31 and ZA III, p. 235. The KU.A.TIR is therefore probably an edible herb or cereal. It is mentioned in the present passage as being offered to Ninib along with the sweet-smelling tarrinnu, and a drink-offering of mead, and forms a very common offering both in the ceremonies that accompany some of the present class of texts and in regulations for offerings generally, cf. Nos. 12, 3; 15, 20; 30, 21; 58, 26; IV R 23, no. 1, Rev. Col. III, 1. 27; K 3245, Col. II, 1. 12 (cf. BEZOLD, Catalogue, p. 576), K 6060, 1. 6, K 6068, Col. II, 1. 3 (cf. op. cit., p. 760), K 6207 + K 6225, 1. 7, K 6679 + K 8083, 1. 4, K 8932, 1. 5, etc.

No. 3 (K 8122) is a portion of what was probably a large tablet similar to No. 6. The sixteen lines that have been preserved consist of the conclusion of a prayer to the goddess Damkina (ll. 1—8) and the commencement of one to the god Ninib (ll. 10—16). The first four lines are fragmentary and give no connected text, but from the fifth line onwards the prayer reads:—“May Heaven be thy joy, may the Abyss 6. May the gods of the world be favourable to thee: may the great gods bless thy heart! 7. (May) Ía increase thy dominion! 8. O Damkina, lady of heaven and earth!” This conclusion, which has been restored from that of the prayer to the goddess Istar in No. 8, is not an uncommon one; for somewhat similar endings cf. No. 6, ll. 127—129, No. 9, ll. 19—21, etc. In the latter of these two tablets the gods Anu and Ía are substituted for “the Heaven” and “the Abyss” invoked in l. 5 of the present text. The prayer to Ninib is duplicate of No. 2, ll. 11—20, for the translation of which see p. 18.

13. O thou that the Anunnaki, that knowest the Igigi, 14. O lady of the Abyss, strong one of ,
15. Thou that Ía, thou that dwellest in the Abyss, O lady of heaven and earth!
16. I so and so, son of so and so, am weak ,
17. In the evil of an eclipse of the Moon, which in such and such a month on such and such a day has taken place,
18. In the evil of the powers, of the portents, evil and not good,
19. Which are in my palace and my land, a terrible disease

In his petition to the goddess Ba'u the suppliant implores help in his extremity: he has had a vision at the time of an eclipse of the Moon, in consequence of which he feels that his god and goddess and Marduk the god of his city are angry and have deserted him; let Ba'u therefore in mercy use her influence to ensure their return and a renewal of their favour. The following is a translation of the prayer: —

24. O Ba'u, mighty lady that dwellest in the bright heavens,
25. O merciful goddess, the bestower of ,
26. Whose regard is prosperity, whose word is peace!
27. I beseech thee, O lady, stand and hearken to my cries!
28. give judgement, make a decision !
29. I have turned to thee, I have sought thee, thy ulinnu have
I grasped like the ulinnu of my god and my goddess!
30. Give my judgement, make my decisions, my path,
31. Since thou knowest to protect, to benefit, to save,
32. Since to raise to life, to give prosperity rests with thee!
33. O lady tears have I given thee, thy name have I
34. my ears, do thou protect me and let me . .
. . . thy divinity!
35. The raising of my hand accept and take away my sighing!
36. Let me send thee unto my angry god, unto my goddess who is angry,
37. Unto Marduk, the god of my city who is incensed, whose heart is enraged(?) with me!
38. In the dream and the vision which ,
39. In the evil of an eclipse of the Moon which in such and such a month on such and such a day has taken place,

40. In the evil of the powers, of the portents, evil and not good,
 41. Which are in my palace and my land,
 42. I am afraid, I tremble and I am cast down in fear!
 43. At the word of thy exalted command which in Īkur,
 44. And thy sure mercy which changeth not,
 45. Let my wrathful god return, let my angry goddess,
 46. Let Marduk the god of my city who is enraged,
 47. O Ba'u, mighty lady, mother!

9. $\overline{\text{P}}\text{-tū}$, which occurs in ll. 9 and 11, and $\overline{\text{P}}\text{-ū}$ in l. 12 I have transliterated lā-tū and lā-ū respectively. The adj. is probably a $\overline{\text{فعل}}$ formation of the $\sqrt{\overline{\text{PNS}}}$, "to be strong", though the more usual form of the word is li'u.

25. The beginning of this line is probably to be restored [il-tum] rim-ni-tum, cf. No. 7, l. 35, etc.

26. For tašmû, "prosperity" cf. 82—9—18, 3737, l. 34 (BUDGE, PSBA, Vol. X, p. 86 ff.) ū-ru-ūh šū-ul-mu u taš-mī-i, JENSEN, Kosmologie, pp. 280, 332, etc.

28. One sign only appears to be missing from the beginning of this line, which may possibly be restored: [ana] dī-ni da-ni purus parāsi(si) etc. In this case the sentence forms an introduction to the one that follows it, giving the suppliant's motive in seeking out the goddess. The end of the line contains a phrase similar to dī-ni da-ni and purus parāsi(si), the subs. dug-gun standing in parallelism with dī-ni and purus, while dī- forms the first syllable of the corresponding verb.

29. Besides the corresponding passages in the parallel text No. 6, ll. 71 ff. and its duplicates, phrases similar to those in ll. 29—32 are to be found in K 2587, Obv. ll. 34—38 (IV R 60 [67]). The ulinnu mentioned in l. 29 was probably a woven scarf or garment in which the figure of the god was draped, for, from IV R 21, no. 1 (B), Obv. l. 3 f. it is clear that the ulinnu was capable of being dyed and could be swathed around the hands, while the present passage shows that a god or goddess might possess one, which a suppliant could hold when making his appeal. Cf. also K 6034, l. 5 f. ilu Šamaš imid-ka ilu Šamaš ulinnu-ka aš-bat [ulinnu-ka kīma ulinnu] ili-ya ilu ištari-ya aš-bat, No. 6, l. 73, No. 7, l. 11, etc.

30. For the restoration of the beginning of this line cf. K 2612, l. 5, etc.

37. -lu also occurs in the somewhat parallel text No. 7, l. 19, while in No. 6, l. 82 we find the word written -lu. There is no doubt therefore that the word should be transliterated gam-lu or kam-lu from $\sqrt{\text{𒄀𒄁𒄂𒄃}}$. The verb is used in parallelism with šabâru and is followed by the prep. itti (see especially No. 6, l. 82 ša šab-su-ma gám-lu itti-ya), so that in meaning it must be very similar to, if not synonymous with, šabâsu.

⁹ A ti-bi-il-[li].

The upper portion of No. 5 (K 6019) contains the conclusion of a prayer to the god DI.KUD. Though most of the lines are imperfect the general sense of the various petitions is clear. After asking for the increase of his name and for length of days, the suppliant prays for life and the removal of his sickness: let his sin and his sighing be taken away that he may praise the heart of the god and glorify his name. Ll. 11—19 give the beginning of a prayer to Istar, which is duplicate of No. 1, ll. 29 ff., for a translation of which cf. p. 5.

+ K 9688 + K 11589 + K 12911 + K 13792 + K 13800) that No. 6 is built up of twelve comparatively small fragments of the K. Collection. Guided by the style of the composition and the character of the writing I have gradually collected and joined together these fragments to form the present text. Restorations also have been made from duplicates, so that even in its present somewhat imperfect state, the text furnishes a good idea of the original size of most of the tablets that are here published (cf. Introduction). The tablet contains five prayers addressed respectively to Anu, Nuzku, Sin, Ba'u and probably Šamaš, though in the first, second and fifth prayer the name of the god is missing from the colophon-line with which each concludes. Of the prayer to Anu (a) only the beginnings of the lines remain, from ll. 1—7 of which we gather that the god was invoked as: "Mighty lord , O Anu, mighty lord , God of the sky , O Anu, god of the sky , Loosener of the day , O Anu, loosener of the day , Interpreter of dreams !" The second prayer (b) to the god Nuzku commences: "O Nuzku, mighty one, offspring of Dūrīlu, The darling of Bīl the prince, the director of , The exalted messenger, who ruleth , In the bright heavens is thy command , In Īsara thou makest bright !" The remainder of this prayer and the greater part of that to Sin, the Moon-god (c) which follows it, are too broken for translation; in the latter however ll. 61—65 read: "I have called upon thee, O lord , Truly pity me and , Thou art pitiful, O Sin , Thou art a protector, O Sin , Thou art a benefactor, O Sin, among the gods !" The prayer to Ba'u (d), which stands fourth on the tablet and is to some extent complete, is a parallel text, though not a duplicate, to the prayer addressed to the same goddess on the Reverse of No. 4, as will be seen from the following translation.

Translation.

71. O Ba'u, mighty lady, merciful mother, that dwellest in the bright heavens,
72. I beseech thee, O lady, stand and hearken unto me!
73. I have sought thee, I have turned to thee, like the ulinnu of my god and of my goddess thy ulinnu have I grasped,

74. Since to give judgement, to make a decision,
75. To raise to life and to give prosperity rests with thee, .
76. Since thou knowest to protect, to benefit and save!
77. O Ba'u, mighty lady, merciful mother,
78. Among the multitude of the stars of heaven,
79. [O lady,] I have turned to thee,
80. The upuntu-plant accept and take away my sighing!
81. Let me send thee unto my angry god, unto my goddess
 who is angry,
82. Unto the god of my city who is wroth and is enraged
 with me!
83. 84.
85. O Ba'u, mighty lady at the word of thy exalted command which in Ikur,
86. And thy sure mercy which changeth not,
87. Let my wrathful god return, let my angry goddess , 88. Let the god of my city (return) who is wroth and whose heart is enraged with me!
89. Let him that is incensed be pacified, let him that is enraged
90. O Ba'u, mighty lady, that dost hold ,
91. Unto Marduk, king of the gods, my merciful lord ,
92. Broad is thy protection, mighty is thy compassion !
93. The gift of favour and life upon [me bestow],
94. That I may praise thy greatness, that I may bow in humility before thee!

After a colophon of two lines in which the KAS.SAG (cf. supra, p. 20 f.) is appointed to be offered and the incantation to be recited three times, there follows (e) the last prayer on the tablet. This is in all probability addressed to the Sun-god, though the prayer appears to commence with an invocation to Marduk beginning: "O mighty, perfect, powerful Marduk . . . ! Who art unique, who openest . . . , The ruler of the dead and of the living . . . , . . . the Light of heaven and earth!" The next ten lines are very broken, after which the tablet continues: —

111. O judge of the gods, lord of the Igigi,
112. O Šamaš, lord of the land's destiny, the of charms art thou!

113. Decree my destiny, make pleasant my path!
 114. Let my powers be propitious!
 115. Let my dreams be favourable!
 116. The dream I have beheld do thou establish favourably!

In these lines the occasion of the prayer is stated to have been a dream, the significance of which was evidently ambiguous, for the suppliant prays that its result may be favourable. The conclusion of the prayer, which has been already referred to (cf. supra, p. 24) as one that is not uncommon, runs: "O Šamaš, prince of the gods! May heaven be thy joy, may the earth ! May the gods of the world bless thee! May the mighty gods benefit thy heart!" The catch-line commences: "O mighty god!"

18. For the city Dûrilu cf. DELITZSCH, Paradies, p. 230. The sign-group DUR.AN.KI is, however, also explained by JENSEN (Kosmologie, p. 485, n. 1) as a cosmic locality, "the place of the junction of heaven and earth".

23. The restoration a-na a-[ši-ka] may be regarded as almost certain, supported as it is both by the traces on the tablet and by the variant reading ana  -ka of the duplicate A.

71. Before the incantation commencing with this line the duplicate D appears to have contained some directions for ceremonies, of which however only traces of three characters remain. Cf. pl. 12, n. 1.

73. In line 74 we should have expected some expression similar to bašû ittiki or tîdî for the two infinitives to depend on. Taking the text as it stands we must assume that the second aššum does not commence a fresh clause, but is merely a repetition of the first, the infinitives in l. 74 depending, like those in the following line, on bašû ittika. These three lines, describing the judicial but at the same time compassionate character of the goddess, give the reason for the appeal made in l. 73.

79. On the probable restoration of the beginning of this line cf. infra sub No. 7, l. 16. For as-hur-ki the duplicate E evidently reads some other verb, the traces of which may be taken to represent either -kid-ki, or possibly -dan-ki; the reading of D, so far as it goes, agrees with that of E.

80. Though the meaning is clear the construction of upuntu muḫ-ri-in-ni-ma is unusual. While the suffix forms the direct object, upuntu must also be regarded as governed by the verb: "Accept me in respect of the upuntu", i. e. "accept my offering of the upuntu-plant". For a discussion of the meaning of upuntu cf. JENSEN, ZK. II, p. 31 f., where he shows that it is a plant capable of being used for food, that it is not very tall, that it is often employed in religious ceremonies and that its seeds are planted and not merely sown. HALÉVY's comparison of the word with the Talmudic יָעַן "pea" he thinks not unlikely.

97. The bracketed portions of ll. 97—102, 121 f., 124, 126, 128 and of the word damikṭi in l. 118 have been restored from No. 10, ll. 7—24. I have not throughout attempted a restoration of each of these incantations from the other, as they are too broken to admit of such a course, but in plates 13, 14 and 21 I have given each text as it occurs on the tablet and in my transliteration have restored those passages only about which there appears to be no doubt.

Parts of three incantations have been preserved by No. 7 (K 3330 + Sm. 394 + 81-2-4, 244). Of the first incantation only the beginning of the last few lines remain. The second has been restored from duplicates, so that it presents a text from which very little is now missing. It is addressed to a goddess whom it hails under the title of Bilit ili, and is intended not for general recitation but for use only after a lunar eclipse, the usual eclipse-formula being introduced before l. 23. With these two exceptions the composition closely follows the hymn to the goddess Ba'u, in No. 6, for a translation of which cf. supra, p. 35 f. On the Reverse is a prayer to the astral deity Išhara (in l. 34 she is addressed by her title of ^{hakkab} Akrabu, cf. JENSEN, Kosmologie p. 71), which like the second prayer on the tablet, contains the eclipse-formula (cf. l. 60 f.). The incantation commences: "O Akrabu, Merciful goddess, Who heareth supplication, Who bestoweth life!" The god Išum is next invoked, and he also is described as "the hearer of supplication". In ll. 46—48 both deities are addressed in a petition for mercy and the removal of sin ("Truly pity me! Great is my sin! Before you let my sin be loosened!") From l. 49 onwards the suppliant addresses himself solely to the goddess. After petitioning for judgement he comes to the main object of his prayer, which is to seek deliverance from sorcery and the spells which men may weave against him.

14. In both the duplicates C and E before īdī, the last word in the line, there is a blank space preceded by traces of the character . The third sign in the line is also , which = īfira (cf. the dupl. A, and BRÜNNOW, List, no. 7739). Since it is improbable that  would be used by itself twice in the same line as an ideogram for different words, the two following signs   must be regarded as a compound ideogram; and, unless the text of C and E is wholly different from that of A (an unlikely supposition in view of their close resemblance in the preceding lines), we must conclude that   = the inf. gamāla of A, while the inf. sūsubu is omitted altogether. It is already known that   (= ŠU.GAR) = gamālu (cf. BRÜNNOW, List, no. 7250), so that   (= ŠU.KAR) would represent a difference in writing the same word.

16. The second half of this line, commencing bīltu ka-., is probably to be restored bīltu ka-[a-si] The verb that follows in A is as-hur-ki, so that the line in that duplicate runs: "O lady! to thee have I turned etc." The text however is probably to be restored according to E, which it follows in many places in preference to the text of A (cf. ll. 9, 15 f., 19—22). For the reading of E cf. supra p. 36.

19. [ina² bi]-ri u šutti it-ta-na-aš-ka-nam-ma may possibly have been expanded to form l. 83 f. of A.

26. gām-lu has been restored from A, the only duplicate that covers that portion of the text. It is possible that the tablet read gām-lu as in l. 19.

53 f. For a discussion of the phrases occurring in these two lines, cf. infra sub No. 12, l. 1.

62. This line has been restored from K 9909, a fragment of a prayer, which is also addressed to the goddess Iškara and from l. 59 onwards forms a closely parallel text (see below).

No. 8 is formed from two fragments of the K. Collection (K 2396 + K 3893) which I have joined. Only one side of the tablet has been preserved, and this is evidently the Reverse, as its beginning is too abrupt to form the commencement of an incantation. The first nineteen lines are addressed to the goddess Istar, and only the beginning of the incantation is missing, in which the goddess is addressed by name, and which apparently concluded the Obverse of the tablet. Ll. 6—11 are regularly divided, the first half of each stating some attention or observance on the part of the suppliant towards his goddess, which balances and justifies the petitions contained in the second half of the line. The colossi whose favour is invoked in ll. 12 and 13 evidently surround the goddess on all sides and possibly flanked the entrances to her shrine. Then follow various petitions couched in general terms for prosperity, life and length of days, and the prayer concludes with a formula of benediction.

Translation.

1. good is thy supplication when the spirit(?) of thy name is propitious!
2. Thy regard is prosperity, thy command is light!
3. Have mercy on me, O Istar! Command abundance!
4. Truly pity me and take away my sighing! 5.
6. Thy have I held: let me bring joy of heart!

7. I have borne thy yoke: do thou give consolation!
8. I have thy head: let me enjoy success and favour!
9. I have protected thy splendour: let there be good fortune and prosperity!
10. I have sought thy light: let my brightness shine!
11. I have turned towards thy power: let there be life and peace!
12. Propitious be the favourable šidu who is before thee: may the lamassu that goeth behind thee be propitious!
13. That which is on thy right hand increase good fortune: that which is on thy left hand attain favour!
14. Speak and let the word be heard!
15. Let the word I speak, when I speak, be propitious!
16. Let health of body and joy of heart be my daily portion!
17. My days prolong, life bestow: let me live, let me be perfect, let me behold thy divinity!
18. When I plan, let me attain (my purpose): Heaven be thy joy, may the Abyss hail thee!
19. May the gods of the world be favourable to thee: may the great gods delight thy heart!

After the colophon in l. 20 f., prescribing an offering of incense and a drink-offering to be set before Ištar and the ceremony of raising the hand to be three times performed (cf. supra p. 13 f.), there follows the commencement of a hymn to certain stars, beginning: "Ye brilliant stars, who !
2. Ye bright ones, whom the great gods ! 3. To destroy evil did Anu create you!"

17 f. The ends of these lines have been restored according to No. 9, ll. 11, 24, etc.

21. In this line mi-iḫ-ḫa takes the place of the common ideogram KAS.SAG (cf. supra p. 21). The mihḫu itself is not of uncommon occurrence in directions for ceremonies, cf. K 6209, l. 9 where an offering of the mi-iḫ-ḫa is prescribed, the phrase [KAS].SAG tanaki(ki)-ma occurring four lines above, K 6230 Col. IV, l. 3 [mi]-iḫ-ḫa illa, l. 7 mi-iḫ-ḫi kun-ni, etc.

The two fragments K 2558 + K 9152, which I have joined and which form the basis of the text of No. 9, contain portions of two incantations, the first of which has been completed from Col. III, ll. 1—21 of K 2538 etc., part of a composite and chiefly bilingual text (cf. IV R², pl. 21*). Ll. 1—12 have been restored from this tablet, which is cited as B, without alteration, but in ll. 13—17 several restorations have been made in accordance with other portions of the text (cf. also No. 22, ll. 14 ff.) in preference to the corresponding readings of B. The incantation is addressed to Marduk and reads as follows.

Translation.

1. O mighty, powerful, strong one of Aššur!
2. O noble, exalted, first-born of Īa!
3. O Marduk, the mighty, who causeth Īhura to rejoice!
4. Lord of Isagila, Help of Babylon, Lover of Īsida!
5. Preserver of life, Prince of l.MAH.TIL.LA, Renewer of life!
6. Shadow of the land, Protector of distant peoples!
7. For ever the Sovereign of shrines!
8. For ever is thy name good in the mouth of the peoples!
9. O Marduk, mighty lord,
10. At thy exalted command let me live, let me be perfect and
11. let me behold thy divinity!
12. When I plan, let me attain (my purpose)!
13. Cause righteousness to dwell in my mouth!
14. mercy in my heart!
15. Return and be established! May they command mercy!
16. May my god stand at my right hand!
17. May my goddess stand at my left hand!
18. May my god, who is favourable, stand firmly at my side,
19. To give utterance, to command, to hearken and show favour!
20. Let the word I speak, when I speak, be propitious!
21. O Marduk, mighty lord, command life!
22. The life of my life do thou command!
23. Before thee brightly have I bowed(?) myself, let me be satisfied!
24. May Bil be thy light, may Īa shout with joy unto thee!
25. May the gods of the world be favourable to thee!
26. May the great gods delight thy heart!

The second incantation commences the Reverse of the tablet, and is addressed to a goddess to whom the following titles are ascribed:—

32. Queen of Isagila the palace of the gods, the mountain!
33. Lady of Babylon, the Shadow of lands!
34. Lady of the gods, who loveth to give life,
35. Who giveth succour in sorrow and distress!

36. The onē, who holdeth the hands of,
37. Who supporteth the weak, who poureth out seed,
38. Who protecteth life, who giveth offspring and seed,
39. Who bestoweth life, who taketh away sighing, who accepteth prayer,
40. Who hath made the peoples, the whole of creation!
41. [Lady?] of the rising and the setting, the mistress of Bil!

1. This prayer is included in the list of incantations K 2832 + K. 6680, Col. I, 1. 11 (cf. supra p. 15).

3. šal-ba-bu is explained by BRÜNNOW, ZA, IV, p. 242 as = "anger", since in V R, 29, 23 h the word is followed by ni'-u which occurs again in V R, 21, 43 d apparently as a synonym of a-ga-gu (ibid. l. 40 d). This explanation does not suit the word in the present passage. But a-ga-gu, besides meaning "to be angry", also = "to be strong", while ni'-u in the text cited by BRÜNNOW stands between the words tī-bu-ū "to advance, press on" and šal-tum "battle"; šal-ba-bu would therefore appear to be an epithet, or possibly a substantive, denoting the attribute of strength.

9. B omits the latter half of the line, reading without break: "O Marduk, mighty lord, at thy weighty command let me live!"

15. In B, published in IV R², pl. 21*, for na-an-[𒀭𒀭𒀭𒀭] read na-an-𒀭𒀭𒀭𒀭 according to the traces on the tablet.

23. In form a-tal-lu-ka might be II 2 from ilû "to be high" with the same meaning as II 1; but the prep. ma-har-ka would then be out of place. I have therefore taken adalluka for adallaluka, the prep. merely repeating the suffix of the verb.

24. li-riš-ka, cf. K 7592 etc. Obv. l. 21 (BRÜNNOW, ZA, V, p. 77) li-riš-ka Bâbilu^{KI}.

26. In B (IV R², pl. 21*) for $\text{𐎶𐎶𐎶} \rightarrow \text{𐎶𐎶𐎶}$ read 𐎶𐎶𐎶 \rightarrow 𐎶𐎶𐎶 . The 𐎶𐎶𐎶 is carelessly written on the tablet.

41. This passage proves that ši-i-𒀭 is to be read šîtas, not ši-i-TAŠ (= tan) = šîtan, as is suggested by JENSEN, Kosmologie, p. 14, probably on the authority of DELITZSCH, AL³, p. 35, no. 311. The forms šîtas and šîtan evidently existed side by side. JENSEN (loc. cit.) explains the word as meaning "the culmination-point of the Sun".

No. 10 (K 5980 + K 8746) is, according to l. 35, a copy of an older tablet. Unlike the other texts in this volume it is written in the Babylonian character, and, though in ll. 6 and 26 it contains the distinctive colophon-line, in l. 34 it presents a different one to that usually found in this class of texts. It contains parts of three incantations, the first being addressed to Marduk, the second to Šamaš, and the third to a god whose name has not been preserved. The second of these three incantations is a duplicate of No. 6, ll. 97 ff. and has been partly restored from that text; in many places however the tablets are too broken to admit of restoration from one another (cf. p. 37).

7. It is possible that the horizontal wedge which follows  (cf. plate 21) is merely a slip made in writing the sign ; in this case read a-pil ^{il}Marduk.

17. The phrases in this line appear to have stood in the reverse order to that in which they occur in No. 6, for it is improbable that li-ši-ra i-da-tu-ú-a was included in l. 16, leaving lid-mi-ka šunâti^{pl}-ú-a as a line by itself.

18. The traces of the character before  suggest the Bab. form of , in which case the line would read: šunâti^{pl} aṭ-tu-la etc.

20. This line possibly contained l. 120 f. of No. 6 in the reverse order.

27. Only one sign is missing from the beginning of l. 27. In the transliteration I have restored this as , regarding the line as the beginning of the incantation which is continued on the Reverse. If however the line contained directions for ceremonies,  should be restored, giving as the commencement of the line the common ceremonial formula iṣuṣ an-nam. The signs  should possibly be read as one character .

31. Possibly for  read , ar-ri

Section II.

Prayers addressed to Gods.

This Section, as its title indicates, is composed of tablets containing prayers addressed only to one god. They may indeed take the form of large tablets, each including several incantations interspersed with ceremonies, and resembling in arrangement those published under Section I; they differ from these, however, in that, instead of being addressed to various gods and goddesses, the prayers and ceremonies on each tablet are all addressed to the same god. Nos. 12, 21 and 22 are good examples of this class of text. A second subdivision might be made of smaller tablets such as Nos. 11, 18 and 19, which contain but one prayer in some cases accompanied by a few directions for ceremonies. In addition to their difference in size they are further distinguished from the former class by being inscribed on a somewhat coarser clay. They are moreover written in a slightly larger character and a few have the appearance of being extracts from the larger tablets made possibly for some temporary purpose.

Some of the Nos. included in this Section are merely fragments, of which so little has been preserved that it is impossible to say with certainty to what form of text they originally belonged. It is indeed probable that No. 13 was originally a large tablet similar to No. 12, and that No. 29 is a fragment of one of the smaller extracts, but in many cases there is insufficient data for a final classification. As however each contains a prayer to one god, and there is no definite indication that they included prayers to other deities, they have

The incantation contained by No. 11 (K 235 + K 3334) is addressed to the god Marduk and is mainly concerned with petitions for the removal of sin. Though some of the lines are broken and portions of the incantation are obscure, the line of thought running through the composition is clear. The

 abi-ya ummi-ya
 aḫi-ya ² C-ti-ya ni-šu.

suppliant commences with an invocation of the god as "the hero Marduk, whose anger is the storm-flood", and whose word the disobedient and rebellious cannot disregard. In l. 5 f. he complains that, though Marduk has granted him eloquence, he has also afflicted him ("My words in my heart he bringeth forth! Like an old man hath he bowed me down!"). Therefore, after praising the righteous among mankind and stating his own aspirations ("whoever hath learnt the way of god let me praise, wickedness I have not possessed; the sanctuaries of life let me seek!"), he asks in ll. 19 ff. to be purified from his sin and delivered into the favourable hands of his god. Then follows a sort of litany for the removal of his sin, in which he successively addresses Irûa, Nabû, Tašmîtu, Nirgal, Anu etc. In the last three lines he returns to the god Marduk, for the renewal of whose favour he prays in the following terms: "Let thy heart like my father my begetter and the mother who bore me return into its place! O hero Marduk, let me bow in humility before thee!"

After the incantation there follow four lines of directions for ceremonies intended to accompany its recitation. "Do the following. Before Marduk a ŠA.NA of incense shalt thou set, a ŠA of oil, a drink-offering, water, honey (and) butter shalt thou offer, the seed of the maštakal-plant in the middle of the oil cast,, recite the incantation and anoint with oil." The catch-line commences a prayer to a god whom it hails as "the exalted, the perfect, the powerful!"

1. The duplicate A commences the text with the words šiptu bît nu-ru "incantation of the house of light", a title that is omitted in the text itself. For other incantations with this heading cf. No. 22, l. 35, K 2587, Obv. l. 30 (IV R 60 [67]), K 54 (BEZOLD, Catalogue p. 14 and Vol. II p. XXIII), K. 157, l. 9 (ibid. p. 41), K 2425, l. 1 (ibid. p. 442), K 7866, l. 1 (ibid. p. 880), K 9004, l. 10, Rm. 581, l. 5, etc.

i-zis-su (var. i-zi-su) for izzît-su, izzîtu being prob. a synonym of uzzu and uzzatu "anger".

20 f. These lines have been restored from K 3927, Rev. l. 3 f.

27. It is possible that -ku in lu-zis-ku = '2 s. m. suffix, cf. DELITZSCH, Grammar, § 56, Addenda.

The text of No. 12 (K 163 + K 218) has been published in IV R¹, pl. 64 and revised in IV R², pl. 57, the Reverse of K 2379, which is duplicate of ll. 76—96, being given on p. 11 of the Additions to the latter volume. It is here republished with restorations and variant readings from five duplicates.² The text as given in IV R¹ has been transliterated into Hebrew characters by HALÉVY, Documents religieux, p. 179 ff. and a translation of ll. 76—82 is given by LENORMANT, La divination, p. 212 f. and of ll. 1—24, 30—35, 61—95, 101—107 by SAYCE, Hibbert Lectures, p. 536 ff. (cf. BEZOLD, Catalogue, p. 42). The tablet is concerned entirely with the worship of the god Marduk, the object of its petitions and ceremonies being the cure of the suppliant who is suffering from sickness. The greater part of the tablet is occupied by the prayer or incantation addressed to the god, which is, however, preceded and followed by directions for ceremonies. The incantation is to be recited by the mašmašu or priest who also carries out the ceremonies that accompany it, for l. 16 contains a definite injunction to this effect, while in the last line of the prayer (l. 94) the mašmašu speaks in his own name. The prayer is, however, composed from the point of view of the sick man, on whose behalf the priest recites it.

² After the plates had been lithographed the duplicate cited as C was increased by the addition of a fresh fragment, K 3289, Prof. ZIMMERN having last summer (1894) recognised it as a duplicate of K. 163, ll. 73—90. The variant readings of C therefore, which are given on pll. 29 f., though correct as far as they go, are not exhaustive. In the footnotes to the transliteration of the tablet however the fresh variants of C have been incorporated, and in all cases where the transliteration would leave the exact reading doubtful the cuneiform has been added in brackets.

The first line of the tablet forms a sort of heading or introduction, and, while stating the occasion of the prayer, contains a general direction to the effect that when the sickness has fallen on the man nothing evil or inauspicious is to be allowed to approach him. Then follows the first section on the tablet, containing 14 ll. of directions for ceremonies, which commence as follows:— "Perform the following. In the night sprinkle a green bough with pure water. Before Marduk the drink-offering shalt thou set. Dates (and) shalt thou heap up. A ŠA of oil, a drink-offering, water, honey (and) butter shalt thou offer; thou shalt set there an incense-burner, corn shalt thou heap up; a ŠA.NA of incense shalt thou offer. The-drink shalt thou pour out." The rites in the next line and a half are obscure; at l. 7 offerings of flesh are prescribed, three preparations of flesh being specified. In l. 8 the command is given to take the oil of certain woods, and the next two lines contain a list of substances that are to be cast into the oil, including gold, fragments of various kinds of wood and plants, and incense. In ll. 11 ff. certain offerings are specified in honour of the AN.ĜUL.MIŠ, the offerings consisting of one piece of alabaster, one piece of gold, one piece of lapis-lazuli and one seal. In the principal prayer of the tablet reference is made to each of these four offerings (cf. ll. 69—73), and, as the prayer is addressed throughout to Marduk, it is obvious that AN.ĜUL.MIŠ is merely a title of the god Marduk.¹ The ceremonies conclude with an injunction to the officiating priest to hold the hand of the sick man and recite the incantation. This incantation, which occupies ll. 17—94, reads as follows.

At l. 45 the suppliant makes a formal statement of his own name along with that of his father, after which the tablet continues broken for several lines, only disconnected words having been preserved. When the lines once more become connected we find the suppliant imploring that the life of his body may be restored, the disease from which he is suffering being put down to the influence of magic. He concludes a description of his symptoms with the words: "My powers and my soul are bewitched and there is no righteous decision!" He therefore makes a direct appeal to the god in the following words:—

59. O lord, at this time stand beside me and hearken to my cries, give my judgment, make my decision!
 60. The sickness do thou destroy, and take thou away the disease of my body!

61. O my god (and) goddess, judge ye mankind, and possess me!
62. By the command of thy mouth may there never approach anything evil, the magic of the sorcerer and of the sorceress!
63. May there never approach me the poisons of the evil of men!
64. May there never approach the evil of dreams, of powers (and) portents of heaven and of earth!
65. Never may the evil of the portent of city and land overtake me!
66. In spite of the evil mouth, the evil tongue of men in thy sight let me be perfect!
67. Let nothing evil ever restrain the plant of the god of joy that is placed upon my neck!
68. The evil curse, the mouth that is unfavourable let it cast aside!
69. Like alabaster let my light shine, let me never have affliction!
- Rev.
70. Like lapis-lazuli may my life be precious in the sight, let it establish mercy!
71. Like gold, O my god and my goddess, may prosperity be with me!
72. In the mouth of the peoples may I be blessed!
73. Like a seal may my sins be torn away!
74. May the evil curse, that is unfavourable, never draw nigh, may it never be oppressive!
75. Before thee may my name and posterity prosper!
76. May the plants and that are set before thee loosen my sin!
77. Never may there approach me the wrath or anger of the god,
78. With misery, disgrace (and) sin; from the curse
79. May the raising of my hand, the invocation of the great gods, give release!
80. At thy mighty command let me approach! Command thou life!
81. Like heaven may I shine among the enchantments that possess me!
82. Like the earth may I be bright in the midst of spells that are not good!
83. Like the heart of heaven may I be bright; may the power of my sins be destroyed!

84. May the binu-wood purify me, may the-plant deliver me, may the ukuru-wood remove my sin!
85. May Marduk's vessel of purification bestow favour!
86. May the flaming censer(?) of the god make me bright!
87. At the command of Īa, king of the Abyss, father of the gods, the Lord of wisdom,
88. At the raising of my hand may thy heart have rest, O
Marduk, the priest of the great gods, the arbiter of the Igigi!
89. The word of Īa let me glorify, and, O queen Dankina, let me have dominion!
90. May I thy servant so and so, the son of so and so, live, let me be perfect,
91. Let me revere thy divinity, and let me bow in humility before thee!
92. O my god, let me revere thy power!
93. O my goddess, let me tell of thy greatness!
94. And may I the priest, thy servant, bow in humility before thee!

On the conclusion of the prayer there follow three short sections of ceremonies, an incantation of ten lines, and a final section of ceremonial directions. After the first of these sections the sick man himself ceases to take part in the ritual, for the section concludes with the injunction that he shall go straight to his house without looking behind him. The remainder of the tablet deals with the due disposal of some of the offerings and objects, that have been used in the ceremonies at the commencement of the Obverse and in the course of the incantation.

Ll. 101—104 form two sections of two lines each which contain directions concerning the stones and the plant of "the god of joy" mentioned in ll. 11 ff., 66 ff. Then follows a short incantation addressed to "the god of joy" himself, in which he is besought to make the šidu and lamassu propitious and restore by his command the favour of the angry god and goddess. The last section on the tablet contains directions concerning the plant of "the god of joy", the recital of the incantation and the offering of a vessel of purification and a censer. L. 121 gives the catch-line for the next tablet which probably contained similar prayers and ceremonies to be recited and performed for the relief of some other form of sickness.

1. In K 2513, a tablet containing directions for ceremonies, the first section of Col. IV commences: inuma amîlu lumun murši ZI.TAR.RU.DA DI.PALA | KA.LU.BI.DA ú-pi-šu lim-niti¹ (cf. BEZOLD, Catalogue, p. 449), while the second section contains ceremonies for a similar occasion; it is therefore probable that the ceremonies attached to the incantation in No. 12 form an extract from some larger work devoted entirely to ceremonial observances. The disease itself, with which the tablet deals, would appear to be of the nature of possession or bewitchment, cf. K 2572,¹ 1.8 inuma a-na amîlu ZI.TAR.RU.DA šá² NIN.KILITI í-pu-us-su, and 1.13 f. amîlu šá ZI.TAR.RU.DA íp-šu-šu | ana pân³ MAR.BU.DA likmisu(su), and the somewhat similar texts K 3278, ll. 1 ff., 8 ff., and K 6172, ll. 1 ff., 11 (cf. op. cit. pp. 519 and 768); see also K 9612 + K 10760, ll. 10 ff., etc.

3. For a discussion of the KU.A.TIR cf. supra p. 22 f.

4 f. For ŠA.NA burâši and KAS.SAG tanaki(ki) cf. supra p. 20 f.

5. That  = aru (BRÜNNOW, List, no. 5570) = the flower (of a palm) cf. JENSEN, ZK II, p. 26. The tablet clearly reads , not  as in IV R¹, nor  as in IV R². The   is possibly to be identified with the plant šam  , which occurs in Sm. 8, Col. I, l. 14 f., where it is rendered by ha-aš-ku-ra-ku, and ha-aš-ku-ur (cf. BRÜNNOW, List, no. 4193).

6. According to BRÜNNOW, List, no. 8613 ruššu is also a possible rendering of the group KU.ĦUŠ.A.

7. The three forms of flesh here enumerated may represent the flesh of three different beasts, or flesh in general prepared in three different ways. The širi KA.IZI was poss. so named from its appearance, KA.IZI being = hamâtu, ša išâtî (cf. BRÜNNOW, List, no. 651).

¹ For the text of this tablet cf. BOISSIER, Documents assyriens, Paris, 1894, p. 42. For  at the beginning of l. 6 read, according to the tablet,   i. e. ina mûši šú-a-tum etc.

8.  is to be here taken as = šamnu (cf. LATRILLE, ZK II, p. 356 f.). In ritual texts šamnu "oil" is rendered by ,  and  almost indiscriminately. No clear distinction in their use can be observed, though perhaps  is more often used for "oil" in general,  or  when the oil of some particular tree is specified.

That $\mathbb{I} \mathbb{I}$ should be read, not $\mathbb{I} \mathbb{I} \mathbb{I}$ as IV R², cf. l. 116.

9. That  is a material used in building is clear from the East India House inscription, Col. II, l. 45 (cf. SCHRADER'S Keilins. Bibl., Bd. III, Hft. II, p. 14 and DELITZSCH, Wörterbuch, p. 110, note 1). The ideogram is transliterated in the text as gassu, in accordance with a communication from Dr. BEZOLD, who has come across the group in K 4864, l. 16 f. rendered by  , and who compares the Arabic جَص. Cf. also BRÜNNOW, List, no. 8470.

10. $\text{𐎶𐎵} \text{𐎧𐎶}$ cannot here = šitas, but is prob. the name of a plant or tree, 𐎶𐎵 being the determinative; cf. the plant $\text{𐎶𐎵𐎶𐎶} \text{𐎧𐎶}$, which occurs in Sm. 8, Col. II, l. 5 and possibly in K 4354, Col. II, l. 12 (II R, pl. 43, no. 2), etc.

11 ff. The sign  in the phrases   abnu  parîtu,   kurâsu, etc. is to be taken as the relative, not as a numeral, the duplicate A giving the variant reading    . In ll. 12 and 73 kunukku is written with the determinative , in l. 13 with  , while in l. 73 the duplicate C writes the word with both determinatives.

16. The end of this line should probably be restored šiptu ilū Marduk [bīl mātātī] III šanītu munu-su from l. 17, the incantation being cited by the words with which it commences. In this common rubric the suffix is not generally appended to the verb munu, so that it is possible the second 𐎶 is merely an error, through ditography on the part of the scribe, for 𐎶𐎶 the phonetic complement that is commonly found with the ideogram 𐎶𐎶𐎶.

20. For  šarru ša of the text A gives the variant reading   rap-šu, which has probably arisen from the misreading of a badly written .

27. The characters in this line are rubbed; if   , the reading of IV R¹ and ² be adopted, the phrase should be transliterated mudahhidi(di) nuššu (i. e.  ), "who giveth great abundance".

30. -nu-u should be read with IV R¹, not -nu-u as in IV R².

32. The title ušungallu in this passage is clearly not used in the sense of "dragon". The parallelism of a-ši-ru in the second half of the line suggests some general term implying authority.

50. The first sign in this line should probably be read  as in IV R², although  is all that is at present visible.

52. The signs  , which occur frequently in a formula on the 6th tablet of the šurpu-series (cf. IV R, pl. 7, Col. II, ll. 2, 12, 22, 32, 42, 52; pl. 8, Col. III, ll. 3, 16), are explained by JENSEN (ZK II, p. 20) as a verb (i. e. nišû III 1) with the 3 m. s. suffix, and as instances of the occurrence of the phrase he quotes the present passage and    in 1.79 (see below). It is more probable that the signs   should be transliterated phonetically ni-šû, a word that is not, however, to be identified with the nišu "spirit(?)", which occurs in the phrase ma-mit niš (=  ) šamî-i . . . niš iršitim(tim) (ibid. Col. I, l. 50; see also BRÜNNOW, List no. 2326). In the passages cited above, as in the present line, ni-šû is followed, not preceded, by ma-mit, and is to be regarded as I 1, Inf. from našû, the two words being probably taken together in the sense of an "oath" or "curse" (lit. "the raising of an oath or curse"). ni-šu, however, sometimes occurs by itself (cf. No. I, l. 48: li-in-ni-is-si ma-mit li-tâ-kil ni-[šu(?)], etc.) so that in the phrase ni-šû ma-mit the two words are perhaps to be taken as separate synonymous phrases in apposition.

67.   i. e. šâkinu(nu) is to be read for   of IV R.

71 f. It is possible that these two lines should be taken together without a break.

73. The application of the metaphor in this line is not at first sight apparent. The kunukku may, however, refer to the seal-impression, and as seal-impressions have been found on small clay cones, which were originally attached to the documents they attested by means of a strip of reed (cf. BUDGE, ZA III, p. 214), it is probable that the tearing off or removal of such a seal-impression is the basis of the metaphor in the text.

77 ff. The division of ll. 77—79, as given in the translation is based on the duplicate C, which reads as follows:—

Rev. 5. Never may there approach me any thing evil, neither the wrath nor anger of the god, misery, disgrace and sin!

6. From the curse may the raising of my two hands, the invocation of the great gods, give release!

Here the general phrase mimma limnu is introduced and defined by the substantives that follow.  has been explained by JENSEN (ZK II, p. 20) as =   = lišisišu or lišisišu (cf. supra sub l. 52). The reading of C, however, proves that the phrase is to be transliterated ni-iš kâti, in apposition to zi-kir ilâni^{p1} rabûti^{p1}.

98.  is written over an erasure; the scribe had probably begun to write  omitting , but corrected his mistake.

99. On the rendering of  by riksu tapatar(ár) cf. supra p. 22 and infra sub No. 16, l. 11.

No. 14 (K 2793) is a fragment of a large tablet and preserves the ends of a few lines only. It contains the conclusion of a prayer to Marduk (ll. 1—10), followed by two lines of directions for ceremonies and the commencement of a second prayer or incantation.

10. The last 3 characters in the line (li-sa-lik = lištalik?) may poss. be read li-ir-ur.

Of the Obverse of No. 16 (K 11681) a few characters only have been preserved, while the Reverse contains the concluding phrases of a prayer to Marduk, the last one on the tablet. The colophon-line that gives the title of the prayer (l. 10) is here accompanied by a rubric or direction contained in a single line (l. 11), which occurs frequently in the present class of texts. For other instances of its occurrence, cf. No. 18, l. 19; No. 21, l. 92; No. 22, l. 69; No. 28, l. 6; No. 34, l. 6; No. 38, l. 4; No. 39, l. 5; No. 41, l. 2; No. 46, l. 10; No. 47, l. 7. It will be seen that the line is never found by itself, but, when it occurs, always follows the colophon-line INIM.INIM.MA ŠU IL.LA etc. It commences with the phrase DU.DU BI i. e. ipuš annam, "do the following", which generally precedes any directions for ceremonies or ritual (cf. supra p. 19). The direction itself consists of the words lû ina KIŠDA lû ina ŠA.NA ipuš, a set formula that rarely varies.¹ No substantive is mentioned for the imperative ipuš to govern; hence it may be inferred that the object of the verb is to be supplied from the previous line, i. e. that the rubric refers to the manner in which the preceding prayer or incantation is to be recited. Two methods of recitation are in fact given as alternatives, the line reading: "Perform (the incantation) either ina KIŠDA or ina ŠA.NA."

In the course of a prayer to Ninib contained by No. 2, l. 27 reads: ar-kus-ka rik-sa KU.A.TIR áš-ruk-ka, "I have bound for thee a cord, the KU.A.TIR have I offered thee!" (cf. supra p. 17). The KU.A.TIR is of common occurrence among the offerings that are prescribed in the ceremonial directions that accompany the present class of incantations (cf. supra p. 22 f.). It would not therefore be surprising if the riksu mentioned in the first half of the line should also be found in the directions for ceremonies. It was suggested above (p. 58) that in l. 99 of No. 12 the phrase  should be transliterated riksu tapařar(ar), "the knot thou shalt loosen", and it is not improbable that in the phrase ina  in the rubric under discussion we may see a further reference to the rite of the knotted cord (riksu). The second ideogram ŠA.NA has been already discussed on p. 19 f., where the suggestion was made that the word denoted a vessel for containing incense. The rubric therefore is to the effect that the incantation must be accompanied either with the rite of the knotted cord, or with the offering of incense.

The fragment No. 17 (K 5668) contains a few words of a prayer followed by some directions for ceremonies. The name of the god to whom the prayer is addressed, though broken, is in all probability Marduk; hence the fragment is included under the prayers addressed to that god.

No. 18 (K 8009) is the lower portion of a comparatively small tablet, of which about one third has been preserved. It probably contained only one prayer, the end of which is represented by ll. 1—17. L. 20 gives the catch-line to the next tablet, while l. 21 evidently marks the commencement of a colophon. The prayer is carefully written and several of the longer lines have been split up into two halves, each of which occupies one line of the tablet (cf. ll. 1 f., 4 f., 6 f., 9 f., 11 f., 15 f.), ll. 3—8, for instance, reading:—

Unto the ocean-flood thy face is !

Thou art exalted in heaven:

All nations thou dost behold!

Thou art mighty upon earth:

Their spirits thou dost behold!

The man that hath sinned thou requitest!

This metrical arrangement of the lines is not to be found, however, in the duplicates A and B. On the Reverse of the tablet the suppliant states that he has offered a present and poured out a libation, and he therefore prays for the removal of his sorrow and sighing and for length of days, concluding with the desire that he may declare the greatness of the god unto distant peoples.

10 ff. Between ll. 8 and 9 of A an insertion or a gloss is written in smaller characters of which only  has been preserved, the tablet reading: —

19. The duplicate A in place of l. 19 gives a ceremonial section of three lines prescribing the offering of incense and the repetition of the incantation three times.

20. This catch-line which gives the first line of the next tablet is to be found in the list of incantations, K 2832 + K 6680, col. I, l. 7 (see above p. 15).

As is the case in the preceding tablet, some of the longer lines in No. 19 (K 34) are divided into halves, which together occupy two lines on the tablet (cf. ll. 4 f., 15 f., 18 f., 29 f.). No. 19 contains only one prayer and this is addressed to the god Bîl and was intended for use after an eclipse of the moon (cf. ll. 10 ff.). The beginning of the prayer, with which the Obverse commenced, has been broken off; it probably contained, however, an invocation of the god, of which the conclusion, describing his power as ruler and creator, has been preserved.

4. O Lord! O Lord! O Lord!
5. Father of the great [gods?]
6. The lord of destinies, the [god?] of charms!
7. The ruler of heaven and earth, the lord of lands!
8. Perfect in judgment, whose word is not altered!
9. Director of destinies
10. In the evil of the eclipse of the moon which in the month (space) on the day (space) has taken place,
11. In the evil of the powers, of the portents, evil and not good,

12. Which are in my palace and my land!
13. At thy command created was mankind!
14. Unto king and noble their names thou didst name!
15. Since to create god and king
16. Rests with thee!

In ll. 17 ff. the suppliant states he has made an offering to the god consisting apparently of three plants, and he therefore seeks the god's protection for himself and for his posterity ("The destiny of my life decree! The making of my name do thou command!"). The prayer concludes with the desire that the god will confer blessings through his attendant minister, the šidu.

29. May the šidu command favour upon favour,
30. Daily may he go with me,
31. Through thy exalted command which is not altered,
32. And thy sure mercy which changeth not!

The Obverse of No. 20 (K 10406) contains the end of one prayer and the beginning of another. The name of the god to whom the first is addressed has not been preserved, but the second, which is continued on the Reverse of the tablet, is addressed to Rammân and is somewhat similar to the commencement of the prayer to the same god in No. 21, ll. 34 ff. In ll. 12 ff. the god is described as "the establisser of days , who causeth the lightning to shine , the strong one, the perfect , the unconquerable, the prince !"

¹ Since the plates have been lithographed I have joined to No. 21 two small fragments K 6612 and K 6588. The former, while giving additions to ll. 1—12, adds two lines to the text which in the Transliteration are numbered [1] and [2]; the latter completes portions of ll. 37—47. For the present text of ll. [1]—12 and 37—47 cf. Additions to the plates.

Like No. 6 (cf. supra p. 33 f.) No. 21 has been built up of several fragments of the K. Collection (K 2741 + K 3180 + K 3208 + K 5043 + K 6588 + K 6612 + K 6672 + K 6908 + K 7047 + K 8498 + K 9157 + K 10219 + K 10497 + K 13431 + K 13793). The tablet at present contains traces of ninety-five lines; about six or seven lines however are missing from the beginning, and eight or nine from the end of the Obverse. It will be seen therefore that the tablet is somewhat similar in size to Nos. 6 and 12. The text commences with a prayer or incantation which is followed by two ceremonial sections, the first of three lines, the second being six lines in length. Then follows a second long prayer, which is in all probability continued without a break on the Reverse of the tablet. This is in turn followed by a section of three lines of ceremonies and a third incantation of fifteen lines. All the prayers and ceremonies are to be recited and performed in honour of the god Rammân.

The first prayer is much broken; it concludes with the desire that Rammân will accept his suppliant's sighing and receive his supplication: let no evil approach or possess him and he will proclaim the greatness of the god unto distant nations. The rubric in ll. 25—27 contains the statement that the prayer is to be repeated during a certain state of the wind, while ll. 28—33 recount the ceremonies that are to accompany its recitation. The commencement of this latter section is identical with that of the first ceremonial section in No. 12, for a translation of which cf. supra p. 60.

The beginning of the second prayer is very similar to No. 20, ll. 8 ff. (see above p. 76). At l. 58 the goddess Bilit is addressed, and in the following line the god Marduk. After allusions to his power and mercy the suppliant states that he is petitioning before him, and the prayer concludes (ll. 61 ff.): "Have mercy on me, and, O Lord, hear my prayer! Destroy my foes and drive away the wicked! Never let there approach me the poisons, the enchantments . . . : ! . . . pity me and command favour! O my god and my goddess, may peace be my portion! may thy heart have rest, may thine anger be loosened, and do thou establish prosperity! Thy greatness let me praise, let me bow in humility before thee!" The directions for ceremonies that follow this prayer enjoin that "when the Storm-god has set his mouth (i. e. has spoken) in the midst of heaven", among other offerings "a vessel of incense with fire of the ašâgu-wood" shall be presented.

The last prayer on the tablet commences with the following invocation of the Storm-god: "O Rammân powerful one, O mighty god! strong one, O hero! who darkenest the day! Possessor of the lightning, Lord of the storm-flood! Who destroyest the heavens, the mountains, and the seas!" The prayer concludes with general petitions for mercy and blessings. The colophon-line in l. 91 is followed by the rubric which has been already discussed on p. 71 f.

25. That  is probably to be transliterated ittanandû, cf. l. 73.

67. As -ma is evidently the phonetic complement,  cannot = lislimû (cf. No. 1, l. 23 f. etc.); it should rather be transliterated by the subs. šulmu as in l. 68.

89. lul-tam-ma-ra for luštammar, cf. lu-uš-tam-mar ilu-ut-ka (or -kî), No. 8, l. 17, No. 9, l. 11, etc.

No. 22 (K 140 + K 3352 + K 8751 + K 10285) forms the upper portion of a large tablet, from which about a quarter is at present missing. The tablet contains portions of three prayers and of one cêremonial section, all of which are composed in honour of the god Nabû. The first prayer on the tablet contains petitions for life and prosperity, and was intended for the relief of a man suffering from sickness and demoniacal possession. The end of the prayer is broken; the first 20 ll., however, read as follows.

Translation.

1. O hero, prince, first-born of Marduk!
2. O prudent ruler, offspring of Zarpanitu!
3. O Nabû, Bearer of the tablet of the destiny of the gods,
Director of Isagila!
4. Lord of Isida, Shadow of Borsippa!
5. Darling of Îa, Giver of life!
6. Prince of Babylon, Protector of the living!
7. God of the hill of dwelling, the fortress of the nations, the Lord of temples!
8. Thy name is in the mouth of the peoples, O šidu!
9. O son of the mighty prince Marduk, in thy mouth is justice!
10. In thy illustrious name, at the command of thy mighty godhead,
11. I so and so, the son of so and so, who am smitten with disease, thy servant,

On the conclusion of the prayer there follows a section of four lines containing directions for the making of certain offerings, and the commencement of an incantation, both of which are much broken. On the Reverse of the tablet is inscribed the conclusion of a prayer, which may possibly be the continuation of that which commences at the end of the Obverse. The sick man, after making a formal statement in l. 51 of his own name and of that of his father, concludes the prayer with the following petitions.

The name of the god to whom the prayer on No. 24 (K 13922) is addressed has not been preserved in the colophon-line. As, however, the ceremonies that follow it are to be observed in honour of Sin during a certain phase or position of the moon (cf. l. 5), it is clear that the preceding prayer is also addressed the Moon-god.

No. 27 (K 2371 + K 13791) contains the first prayer of what was originally a large tablet. It has been restored chiefly from the duplicate which is cited as A. This tablet is a comparatively small one and contains nothing more than the prayer in ll. 1—25 of the text, followed by a catch-line, its Obv. giving ll. 1—15 in 22 lines, its Rev. ll. 16—25 in 10 or 11 lines, while the end of the Reverse is left blank. It is inscribed in rather coarse characters, and was copied from one of the larger texts for Ashurbanipal, who substituted his own name in place of the general formula in l. 11. Moreover the insertion of the eclipse-formula in A changes the general character of its petitions and proves that the copy was required for use during or after an eclipse of the moon. Thus restored, not much is missing from the prayer. Ll. 1—10 contain the invocation of the god, at l. 11 the suppliant states his name and goes on to

No. 28 (K 3355) is a small fragment from the right side of a large tablet. It preserves a few phrases from the end of a prayer to Nirgal and from the beginning of a prayer to a god who is addressed as "a merciful god, the quickener of the dead!

Section III.

Prayers addressed to Goddesses.

Like the preceding division, Section III is made up of tablets containing prayers addressed only to one deity. While the prayers in Section II, however, are composed in honour of gods, those in the present Section are addressed to goddesses. Nos. 30 and 33, and possibly Nos. 29 and 35, contain but one prayer, which is accompanied, in the case of the two former, by directions for ceremonies. The tablets are comparatively small and are inscribed in a somewhat large and coarse character, and, like others in Section II, may perhaps be regarded as forming extracts from the larger compositions. The question whether any large tablet existed, containing a series of prayers and ceremonies addressed only to one goddess, and in its arrangement corresponding to Nos. 12, 21, and 22, is one that cannot be answered with certainty. It is true that Nos. 31, 32, and 34 are fragmentary portions of large tablets, and, as their present contents refer only to one goddess, they have been classified under the present Section. It is not impossible, however, that the tablets of which they are fragments originally contained prayers addressed to other deities. Their inclusion, therefore, under this Section must be regarded as provisional.

No. 29 (K 13907) has preserved three lines from the Reverse of a small tablet, which represent the last line of a prayer followed by its colophon-line, and apparently the catch-line for the next tablet. The latter should possibly be restored from No. 27, 1. 1: [šiptu bī-lungaš-ru]ti-iz-ka-ru bu-kur^{ilu}[NU.NAM.NIR]. If this is so, the sign  must have been written over an erasure.

A little over one third of the original tablet has been preserved by No. 30 (K 3448). The text contains a single prayer addressed to the goddess Istar, followed by a ceremonial section, and, according to the colophon, forms the 134th tablet of a certain series. Of the prayer to Istar only the latter part has been preserved. The suppliant cries that he has poured out a libation to the goddess and prays that her heart may therefore have rest and that her anger may abate. After stating his name in l. 7 and the fact that he is suffering from sickness, he continues:—

8. Thou art the judge of my cause
9. Thou art the director of my path
10. May my god who is angry with me turn!
11. Sorrow, the grave, and bonds may he!
12. May he remove the sickness of my body, may he tear away the of
13. May he loosen the grief of my heart!
14. Cause name and posterity to advance; let there be mercy and compassion; let me praise thy name!
15. Let me live, let me be perfect, let me praise thy greatness!

No. 31 (K 7207 + K 9675 + K 13274) represents the end of the Obverse of a tablet containing prayers and ceremonies addressed to the goddess Istar. Ll. 1—6 give the concluding phrases of a prayer, in the last three lines of which the suppliant states his own name, and, after probably referring to the offerings he has made to the goddess, concludes with a petition for deliverance "in misery and distress". The prayer is succeeded by three lines of ceremonies to the following effect: "In the night before Istar thou shalt sprinkle a green bough with pure water. The drink-offering shalt thou present. Seven times the food shalt thou A of incense shalt thou offer. Place thou there a garment and a gift." L. 11 commences an incantation that was continued on the Reverse of the tablet.

The fragment No. 34 (K 11876) contains a few phrases from a prayer to the goddess ilu MI.MI (cf. BRÜNNOW, List, no. 10449), the two colophon-lines being followed by a second prayer or perhaps the catch-line for the next tablet. Of this line, however, only traces of signs remain.

No. 35 (K 2757) contains portions of a prayer to the goddess Bilit, at the end of which there follows the catch-line for the next tablet and traces of the first line of the colophon (l. 16). The interest of the fragment centres in l. 14, where we find the colophon-line, which is characteristic of the present class of texts, written phonetically (see above p. 13).

Section IV.

Prayers to deities whose names are not preserved.

Section IV is composed of fragments of tablets, which contain the colophon-line that is characteristic of the present collection of texts, but from which the names of the deities addressed are missing. It is generally possible to distinguish whether a god or goddess is addressed. In some cases, however, in addition to the colophon-line, only a few signs have been preserved.

No. 37 (K 9087) contains a few words from the end of one prayer and the first seven lines from the commencement of another. The second prayer is addressed to a goddess and is partly duplicate of the prayer to Ba'u in No. 6, ll. 71 ff., and of that to the goddess, who bears the title Bilit ili, in No. 7, ll. 9 ff. For a translation see above, p. 34 f.

No. 38 (Bu. 91—5—9, 16) is a fragment from the left side of a tablet and preserves the beginnings of two lines from the end of a prayer, which is followed by the two common colophon-lines, the catch-line, and the beginning of the colophon.

Of the first prayer to which the two colophon-lines (l. 4 f.) on No. 39 (K 8930) refer, a few characters only remain. The prayer that commences at l. 6 is addressed to a goddess. The first eight lines contain the invocation, and ascribe to her the power of giving light (to the world); the beginning and end of every line, however, is broken off.

The principal contents of No. 40 (K 2567) consist of fourteen lines of directions for ceremonies. These were preceded by a prayer, of which only a few traces of signs remain. BEZOLD (Catalogue, p. 454) suggests that this fragment belongs to K 2487 (= No. 2, see above, p. 18). The character of the writing on both tablets is very similar.

8. For the explanation of the sign-group $\Xi \text{ IV } \rightarrow \text{I}$ as = irrit zunni, see JENSEN, ZAI, p. 308 (cf. BRÜNNOW, List, no. 6767). What meaning attaches to the group in the present passage is not clear.

12. The suggested restoration of the beginning of this line is based on No. 8, l. 21 (cf. supra, p. 42 f.).

Section V.

Prayers to Astral Deities.

Section V contains prayers to certain stars, which are not regarded as inanimate, but are personified as deities. This personification of the stars and planets is not surprising, for there are not lacking proofs that the greater gods, even when addressed by name in prayer, were regarded as astral powers. To mention three instances in the present collection of texts, in No. 19, l. 17 f. the god Bil is selected from "the multitude of the stars of heaven" to receive a gift, while in No. 6, l. 77 f. the goddess Ba'u, and in No. 7, l. 15 f. the goddess Bilit ili, are sought by the suppliant among the stars. Moreover the astral deities here addressed are invoked in terms as exalted as those employed in prayers to the greater gods, and in No. 50, if my restoration of the passage is correct, the fixed star Sibziana is even credited with the creation of mankind.

The majority of the tablets in this section are of the larger class, and contained, when complete, several prayers, interspersed in some cases with directions for ceremonies.

The upper portion of No. 46 (K 11153 + Rm 582) contains the end of a prayer to the ^{hakkabu} Muštabarrû-mû-tânu,² addressed as a male deity, which, after the double colophon (l. 9 f.), is followed by a prayer to Nirgal, who is invoked as follows:—

11. O Nirgal, lord of Pišu, near to heaven and earth!
 12. Who harasses the, the first-born of KU.TU.ŠAR!
 13. The strong, the perfect, who careth for the whole of the

 14. The offspring of Anu, the first-born son!

15. The word šalummatu expresses the idea of light viewed as an object of terror (JENSEN, op. cit., p. 155).

19. This line is restored from I R 17, l. 8 where Ninib is described as mu-hal-liḫ za-ya-a-ri. Several of the epithets in this prayer are to be found in Aššurnasirpal's dedication.

JENSEN, Kosmologie, p. 152) and not as the plural of kakkabu (see No. 8, l. 22), though the suffix in dā-lī-lī-ku-nu suggests that the prayer is addressed to more than one deity.

The tablet apparently formed one of a series, part of the title of which is contained by l. 9.

The Obverse of No. 48 preserves a few ends of lines from the beginning of the tablet, the Reverse the end of a prayer to the Mulmul-star. No. 50 (K 2801 + K 9490) is a comparatively small tablet inscribed for Aššurbanipal with a prayer to be recited on the occasion of an eclipse of the Moon. The prayer is evidently extracted from one of the larger compositions, which contain several prayers and ceremonial sections. Such a text, similar in size to Nos. 12, 21, and 22, must have been the tablet of which the duplicates A and B are parts. These two fragments do not join but from the style of the writing and character of the clay it may be assumed that they are parts of the same tablet. The prayer in the present text, however, was not extracted from the original of A and B, for the incantation that follows in B commences  , and does not agree with the catch-line of No. 50. The prayer is inscribed to the star Sibziana,¹ addressed as a male deity, and invoked in ll. 1—9 in somewhat extravagant terms. The object of the prayer is to induce Sibziana to remove the evil spells, bewitchments, possession by spectres etc., that have followed in the train of the lunar eclipse. The prayer reads as follows.

Translation.

22. Free me from my bewitchment! Loosen my sin!

¹ For the identification of Sibziana with Regulus, and the explanation of the name as "the true shepherd of heaven" (Rî'u kînu ša šamî), see JENSEN, ZA I, p. 266, and Kosmologie, pp. 36 f., 48 f. etc.

² I. e. created. It is possible that   should be rendered by the Qal, not the Nifal, of zakâru, šumu being understood; in either case the meaning of the line remains the same.

off my life!
24. May the favourable šidu be ever at my head!
25. May the god, the goddess of mankind grant me favour!
26. At thy command let me live!
27. Let me bow down and extol thy greatness!

The catch-line for the next tablet reads: "Thou, O KAK.SI.DI art Ninib, the prince of the great gods!" This line is discussed by JENSEN (Kosmologie, pp. 53 f., 150), BEZOLD having published the fragment K 9490 (cf. ZA III, p. 250), which contains the conclusion of the text.

In No. 51 (K 8190) the colophon-line (l. 9) seems to refer to two prayers, of which the end of the second has been preserved. At l. 10 a ceremonial section of seven lines commences, prescribing the offering of incense and the pouring out of a libation before Sibziana. Ll. 12 ff. contain certain rites to be performed with various plants and woods, including anointing with the oil of šurminu-wood.

Section VI.

Prayers against the evils attending an eclipse of the Moon.

The sixth and final Section might be more strictly termed an appendix, for the texts it contains are only indirectly connected with the series of tablets classified under Sections I—V. Throughout these five sections it will be observed that several of the prayers contain the formula, discussed on pp. 7 ff., in which it is stated that the prayer is offered in consequence of certain evils that have followed in the train of a lunar eclipse. The formula is to be found in No. 1, ll. 1—28, a prayer to Sin, and ll. 36—52, a prayer to Tašmītu, in No. 4, ll. 9—22, a prayer to Damkina, and ll. 24—50, a prayer to Ba'u, in the concluding prayer of No. 6, according to the duplicate F, in No. 7, ll. 9—33, a prayer to the goddess Bilit ili, and ll. 34—63, a prayer to Iškara, in No. 19, ll. 1—33, a prayer to Bil, in the prayer to Nirgal in No. 27, according to the duplicate A, and in No. 50, ll. 1—28, a prayer to Sibziana. It is not, however, confined to the group of texts collected in Sections I—V, but is of somewhat common occurrence in various series and classes of prayers. In Section VI, therefore, I have collected those tablets and fragments in which I have come across the formula. The list, however, makes no pretence of being exhaustive, for it is probable that the eclipse-formula is contained by other tablets throughout the collections from Kouyunjik.

No. 53 (K 3859 + Sm. 383) preserves the bottom portion of a tablet and contains a prayer to Īa, Šamaš, and Marduk, of which both the beginning and end are missing. The suppliant states that he is praying after an eclipse of the Moon, and he implores these three deities to rescue him from the clutches of a spectre, by whom he is continually haunted. What remains of the Obverse commences as follows:—

3. O arbiter of the world, Marduk, the mighty, the lord of Ītura!
4. O Īa, Šamaš, and Marduk deliver me,
5. And through your mercy let me come to prosperity!
6. O Šamaš, the spectre that striketh fear, that for many days
7. Has been bound on my back, and is not loosed,
8. Through the whole day hath me, through the whole night hath stricken me with terror!

The suppliant then describes the ways in which he is tormented by the spectre, who defiles him and attacks his face, his eyes, his back, his flesh and his whole body. On the Reverse of the tablet he recounts to Šamaš how he has tried to appease and to restrain his tormentor. Apparently his efforts have met with no success for he now turns to the Sun-god for relief, which he prays he may receive through his mighty command that is not altered, and through the command of Marduk, "the arbiter of the gods".

10. After the form uz-za-na-ka-pu in l. 9 one might perhaps assign to  in uz-za-na- the new value kap.

18. The character  is not quite accurately rendered on pl. 68, for the small perpendicular wedge should project slightly above the long horizontal one. Elsewhere the forms of this character are somewhat various. While the beginning of the sign () remains constant, together with the small perpendicular wedge () the number and position of the small diagonal wedges above the long horizontal line vary considerably. In K 2971, Col. III, l. 22 three wedges () occur above the horizontal line (not two as in IV R² 56, l. 55 δ), in V R 18, l. 35 f. (as corrected in ZK I, p. 349) two wedges only occur, and in V R 11, l. 10 f. four wedges () are to be found, which in the duplicate K 4410 are written \gg . In all these passages, however, only one diagonal wedge is written below the long horizontal wedge.

23. In the transliteration before the sign \nwarrow I have restored \nearrow , which has been apparently omitted by the scribe in error.

The commencement of No. 57 (K 9909) is very similar to the end of the Reverse of No. 7. Each tablet is addressed to Išhara, No. 57, ll. 2 and 4—7 corresponding to No. 7, ll. 59—62. L. 63 of No. 7, however, does not agree with l. 8 of No. 57, so that the texts, through closely parallel, are apparently not duplicates.

No. 60 (K 3463) consists of the lower portion of a tablet. After three colophon-lines there follows a prayer to Šamaš, which is continued on the Reverse of the tablet. The prayer opens with the following invocation:—

5. O Šamaš, judge of heaven and earth, that burnest the broad earth!
6. O Lord, that openest the ear, the darling of Bîl!
7. Exalted judge, whose command is not altered,

8. Whose mercy no god has ever annulled!
9. A lord art thou, and mighty is thy word!
10. Thy command is not forgotten, thy intercession is unequalled!
11. Like Anu, thy father, thy word is exalted!

On the Reverse of the tablet, which is somewhat broken, the suppliant continues his invocation of the god, and in ll. 19 ff. states the occasion of the prayer.

2. The second half of this line is probably a semitic translation of the Sumero-Akkadian phrases with which it commences. For my conjectural restoration, cf. BRÜNNOW, List, no. 561, and ZIMMERN, Busspsalmen, p. 73.

No. 62 (K 7593) is the upper portion of a large tablet. Its Obverse contains a prayer, which is addressed to more than one deity, and is offered with the object of obtaining help on several occasions of distress. The line that is ruled between ll. 15 and 16 does not mark the commencement of a second incantation, but rather a fresh section of the first prayer. For at that point the suppliant ceases his invocation and the statement of his own condition of alarm, and prays for deliverance from various evil powers and influences. As the first of these evils is that caused by a lunar eclipse the tablet is included in the present Section. The other evils, that are enumerated in ll. 17—20, appear to be of an astral nature. The Reverse of the tablet concludes with a ceremonial section of seven lines.

12. The compound ideogram NAM.BUL.BI appears to be a somewhat general term for evil or unpropitious influences, cf. IV R 17, Rev., l. 15 f., K 2277, Obv., ll. 3 ff., Rev., ll. 1, 4, etc. For the Series of incantations entitled the  , see BEZOLD, Catalogue, p. 456, sub K 2587.

29. For the restoration of the end of this line, cf. No. 40, l. 12; see also No. 30, l. 24.

32. The most recent translation of this colophon has been given by TALLQVIST, Die Assyrische Beschwörungsserie Maqlû, Leipzig 1895, pp. 41, 53 f., etc.

CUNEIFORM TEXTS.

N.B. The numbers which precede the foot-notes refer to the corresponding numbers in the text; when a note refers to one sign only, the number is placed to the right of the sign in the text (*e. g.*¹); when a variant reading is given of more than one sign, the number of the note is placed on each side of the signs referred to (e. g. ¹.¹); when a note refers to a whole line of the text, the number of the note is placed at the beginning of that line. Duplicates of a text are cited by the capitals A, B, C etc. Restorations are placed within brackets []; dupl. = "duplicate"; l. = "line"; r. = "restored from".
